Commuter tickets go on sale at 14 additional outlets

Books of commuter tickets for the Virginia Beach-Norfolk Expressway are on sale at 14 additional area outlets.

The tickets, first used a year ago, have been on sale at several banks in Norfolk, Virginia Beach, Portsmouth, and at three offices of the State Department of Highways and Transportation.

The books of 50 tickets, which sell for $7.50 each, are valid for 60 days and can be used at any time. The tickets provide motorists with a 15-cent toll fare, against a 25-cent charge without the tickets. Motorists using the tickets are restricted to designated lanes during peak traffic hours on the expressway.

"In order to make the purchase of commuter books more convenient for users of the expressway, the department has made arrangements for the addition of these distribution points," said Jack S. Hodge, the department's district engineer at Suffolk.

Motorists may still obtain the commuter books by mail by sending their request, with check or money order to cover the cost, to the department at Post Office Box 3447, Hampton, Virginia 23663. Checks should be made payable to Norfolk-Virginia Beach Toll Road Fund.

New distribution points now open are:

- First & Merchants National Bank:

Blackbeard's buddies?

These pirates may look fierce, but they're really just taking part in the fun of Pirate Jamboe Day, held last week at White Oaks Elementary School in Virginia Beach. These 13 youths were the finalists in a pirate costume contest. Other activities of the day included a game of Search and Destroy using water balloons, a Pirates Parade, deck dances and a Search for the Golden Sword. About 50 youngsters participated in the day's events which were sponsored by the Department of Parks and Recreation as part of its regular program of summer recreation activities.

New land use plan to guide city zoning

Virginia Beach's proposed Comprehensive Plan recommends no more rezonings for the Holland Road and Kempville areas which would increase the number of residential units allowed under present zonings.

The Plan recommends, however, that Bayside can handle an additional level of growth if a series of street and highway changes are adopted.

The Planning Commission on June 20 recommended approval of the Plan, a land use plan which the state requires all political subdivisions to have by 1980.

City planner Robert Scott, at an informal session of City Council Monday morning, explained the Plan in which the city has been divided into nine areas.

Since the plan has to be updated every five years, he said, the Plan is projected over the next five to eight years. When adopted by the city council, the Plan will replace the city's current seven area plans.

Scott emphasized that the Plan is not a zoning plan or zoning ordinance, but a guide.

Scott said that land use recommended in the plan is predicated on the adequacy of public facilities such as roads and schools, environmental concerns such as flood plains, Air Installation Compatible Use Zone areas, drainage, and neighborhood compatibility.

Bayside, he said, could handle an additional level of growth, but to handle this growth the Plan recommends increasing the proposed extension of Wesleyan Drive to a 110-foot right of way instead of a 90-foot right of way, and removing the proposed interchange at the intersection with Diamond Springs Road from the Master Street and Highway Plan.

For much of the undeveloped land a density of six units an acre is recommended.

Councilman George R. Ferrell said that "if the developers see this map (recommending residential development) they will increase density;" that is, seek higher density zoning.

Of the Holland area, Scott said that it was the first where researchers found an inability of the area to handle additional growth. Holland Road can't handle all the traffic, he said.

Development will continue under present zoning, he said, but he could not recommend additional zoning changes.

Following a discussion of an extension of the Sunstream development into a planned unit development and other developments, Ferrell asked, "Are you happy with what's there so far?"

"I have some problems," said Scott. "I don't want them on Salem Road," Ferrell said.

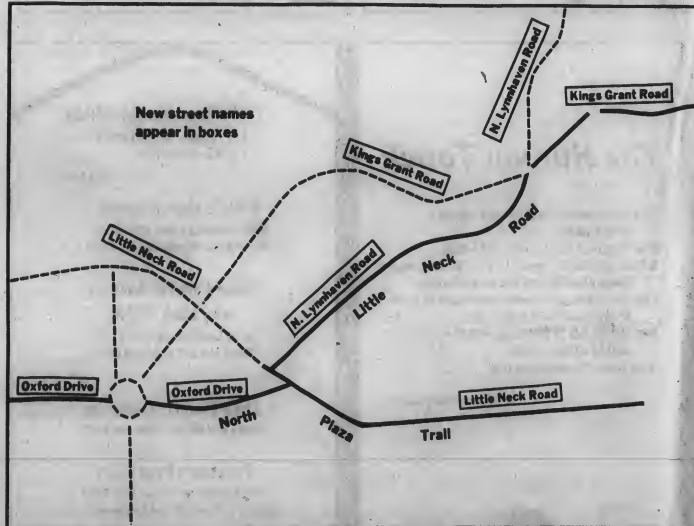

City Manager George L. Hanbury said that the city's PUD ordinance now requires a mix of four housing types, and suggested the city could delete one, apartments.

Ferrell said he was concerned by commercial development which can be included in a PUD.

The Plan recommends:

City changes street names

If you are a resident of the Kings Grant—Little Neck area of Virginia Beach or a visitor to that area, be alert for new street name changes. These changes will affect Kings Grant Road, North Plaza Trail, Little Neck Road, North Lynnhaven Road and Oxford Drive. (See map)

These changes are now in effect. For additional information contact the Virginia Beach Planning Department at 427-4621.

'Beach Cleaner' works in harmony with bathers

Have you been to the beach lately? Chances are, if you have, you've noticed a marked improvement in its appearance over last year. This improvement is due to a new city department called Beach Maintenance, and a new piece of equipment called the Beach Cleaner.

Under the supervision of Wayne Creef, the Beach Cleaner cleans all the debris from the beaches from Sandbridge to the Little Creek Amphibious Base. As it moves along, it leaves behind a beach that is smooth as well as clean.

Mindful of the bathers, the Beach Cleaner is operated only between the hours of 2 and 10 a.m.

This very large, tractor-like machine was purchased for $41,842, certainly not an inexpensive item. The man who operates this machine had on the job training.

At 5:30 a.m., three trucks go out and empty the trash cans on the beach. To conserve gas, they dump the trash into a dumpster which in turn, when full, gets taken to the dump. This also saves on the wear and tear of the city trucks.

Beach maintenance is a year-round job. Cleaning the beaches is only one part of the department's function. It also plants beach grass and puts up sand fences. This helps control erosion to some extent — preserving the dunes is one of the department's main objectives.

So beach lovers, those giant tracks you see in the sand so early in the morning were not caused by an Unidentified Flying Object which happened to land there. They are only the tracks of the Beach Cleaner — hard at work making the beaches clean for you to enjoy.

City council plans July vacation, approves ordinances

July vacation

Virginia Beach City Council in July will meet the first three Mondays but will have a holiday on the fourth Monday.

According to city ordinance council does not meet on the last two Mondays of July, ordinarily this would eliminate two meetings for a council holiday, but this month has five Mondays. Council does not meet on any fifth Monday.

To limit the July meetings to two in the future, council Monday afternoon approved a rewording of the ordinance so that meetings will be held only on the first two Mondays.

Council won't be able to take advantage of the new ordinance any time soon, however. As Councilman Clarence A. Holland pointed out, five Mondays won't come again in seven years."

New ordinances give farmers a break in line fees they would ordinarily have to pay to hook onto city utilities.

Approved by City Council, the ordinances allow the director of the Department of Public Utilities to authorize line fees based on the minimum front footage for residential property for each dwelling unit on property zoned or classified for agricultural use.

The ordinance will make it easier for farmers with long frontages to comply with the city's mandatory ordinances.

City Manager George L. Hanbury gave as an example farms in Sandbridge where lines have been constructed.

Owners of the property will be required to sign an agreement stating that when this property is further developed, subdivided, changes title or experiences a change in tax classification, full fees will become due and payable. The rates applicable will be those prevailing at the time the change takes place and will be based on the land use type which will be in effect after the change.

Restrictions eased

Virginia Beach City Council eased restrictions on mobile homes for farm laborers included in an ordinance approved last week.

Before approving the ordinance, which permits farmers to provide mobile homes on their property for farm laborers, council reduced the land requirement from 250 contiguous acres to 100 contiguous acres and excepted the first mobile home from a requirement for a minimum setback of 500 feet from a city street.

Councilwoman Barbara Henley said that the 250-

Local DAR's honor founder, recall chapter of American history

The grave of Eugenie Washington, great great niece of George Washington and one of the four founders of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution, was marked by the Virginia DAR in a ceremony Wednesday, June 27, the 141st anniversary of her birth.

Miss Washington, who was assigned DAR National Number 1, was buried in the small family graveyard at "Glencaine", two miles north of Falmouth, Virginia, in Stafford County. More than 600,000 numbers have been issued by the National Society DAR which has a current membership of over 200,000.

Attending the ceremony were DAR national officers, state officers and members from chapters throughout the state. Local chapter members in attendance were Mrs. Rice M. Youell Jr., regent, and Mrs. William H. Austin Jr., state chairman, genealogical records from the Adam Thoroughgood Chapter; Mrs. Eugene T. Connors, regent, Lynnhaven Parish Chapter; and Mrs. W. Alton Carswell, state chairman, DAR museum area docents, Great Bridge Chapter.

"Glencaine" was built about 1780 and in 1825 was purchased by R.C.L. Moncure who served as presiding judge of the Virginia Supreme Court from 1870 to 1882. The property now is owned and occupied by a great grandson of Judge Moncure, Daniel McCarthy Chichester.

Eugenie Washington's family lived on adjoining property and the two families intermarried. Members of both the Moncure and Washington families and their descendants are buried in the old graveyard at "Glencaine", among them Eugenie's parents and Judge Moncure.

The bronze marker imbedded in a large granite stone was dedicated by the Virginia DAR state regent, Mrs. Eldred M. Yochim and was unveiled by Mr. and Mrs. Chichester. The marker reads: Miss Eugenie Washington, One of the Four Founders of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution, National Number 1, Marked by the Virginia DAR, June 27, 1979.

Eugenie Washington was the sixth child of William Temple Washington and his wife, the former Margaret Calhoun Fletcher. She was born near Charles Town, Jefferson County, Virginia (now West Virginia) and died in Washington, D.C. on Thanksgiving Day, November 30, 1900.

Eugenie and her sisters were educated at home by their father who was a graduate of the College of William and Mary. The family moved to Falmouth about 1859 but, as a result of hardships suffered on this property which lay between opposing armies of the War Between the States, they lost their land and most of their possessions.

Miss Eugenie was offered and accepted a position in the government in Washington, D.C. where she resided until her death at age 62. It was during her years in Washington that she helped found the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution, whose act of incorporation was approved by the U.S. Congress on December 2, 1895.

Miss Washington was the society's first registrar general and subsequently served as vice president general, recording secretary general, and honorary vice president general. The first president general was Mrs. Benjamin Harrison, wife of The President of the United States.

The other three founders of the NSDAR were Miss Mary Desha, Mrs. Ellen Hardin Walworth and Mrs. Mary Smith Lockwood. There is a memorial honoring the four founders on the C Street side of the NSDAR national headquarters between Continental Hall and Constitution Hall in Washington, D.C.

'Tis the human touch in this world that counts,
The touch of your hand and mine,

Classroom notes

TCC offers industrial engineering technology

The Virginia Beach campus of Tidewater Community College will offer a new curriculum in Industrial Engineering Technology beginning in the upcoming fall quarter.

The first course to be offered in the new curriculum will be Safety and Health Regulations and Codes. The class will meet Wednesday evenings, 7-10, at Lynnhaven Junior High School.

This course will assist students in understanding the requirements for the development of safety standards in industry. The student will become acquainted with the sources of modern safety standards, including an examination of government regulatory codes, and will be given an appraisal of standards currently in effect.

The new curriculum is designed to benefit shop managers and supervisors, those wishing to enter an established business in a management position, and those interested in establishing a business.

For further information, contact the Virginia Beach campus at 427-3070.

Chutter completes requirements

Nancy Carol Chutter of Virginia Beach was awarded the degree of Bachelor of Science in physical therapy at Ithaca College's 84th commencement exercises.

Miss Chutter, who will complete the requirements for her degree at the close of her clinical practice in New York City this summer, is the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Reinald J. Chutter of South Field Place, Virginia Beach.

Two new troopers from Va. Beach

Cecil Everett Bray Jr. and William Lee Hughes Jr. of Virginia Beach have graduated from the Virginia State Police Academy and reported to their duty stations.

In addition to a minimum of 30 days of field training with an experienced trooper, the new troopers have had 20 weeks of basic training which included field and classroom work totalling 1010 hours, exclusive of study period, and covered 142 subjects.

TCC-Virginia Beach scholarships donated by Amphibious Wives Club

The Virginia Beach campus of Tidewater Community College has two $300 scholarships available for spouses and dependents of Navy and Marine Corps personnel.

The scholarships, donated by the Naval Amphibious Officers Wives Club, cover full tuition costs for one academic year at Tidewater

Community College.

Those interested in applying for the scholarships may obtain information and application forms from the Financial Aid office in Building T-2 at the Virginia Beach campus or by calling the school at 427-3070.

Local students attend School for the Gifted

Four Virginia Beach students are part of a group of approximately 143 high school students who are attending the 1979 Governor's School for the Gifted on the campus of Randolph-Macon Woman's College through July 16. Those attending from Virginia Beach are Michael Thomas Milbaker, a student at Kempsville High School, son of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Milbaker; Vicki Lee Scheer, a student at Floyd E. Kellam High School, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Russell P. Scheer; Denise Marie Finkbeiner, a student at First Colonial High School, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert W. Finkbeiner; and Helen Lee, a student at First Colonial High School, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Duk Hyun Lee of Virginia Beach.

The Governor's School, held annually in Virginia since its inception in 1973, offers an accelerated educational program of academic courses, activities, recreation and cultural enrichment, according to Mrs. Isabelle P. Rucker, State Director of Special Programs for the Gifted.

During the Governor's School, students attend courses designed especially for the intellectual challenge they provide. Some of the many courses to be given at Randolph-Macon this summer are: The American Presidency, Computer Programming, Music Composition, Creative Writing, and Psychophysiology.

In addition to academic courses, students also elect activity courses such as photography, codebreaking, sportswriting, drawing, painting, and fiber arts. An important feature of the Governor's School is that no tests or grades are given; students learn for the sake of learning.

Shipyard apprentices earn honors

Eleven Norfolk Naval Shipyard apprentices who are Virginia Beach residents were among 84 whose names appeared on the Tidewater Community College's honor roll list for the last two quarters. Students earning a 3.2 to 4.0 average were eligible for the honor roll. Honor-roll students listed according to shops are:

Shop 2 - Robert Cass; Shop 26 - James Brown and Jon Cookson; Shop 31 - Kenneth Box and Donald Dugger; Shop 51 - Patricia Lambertson and Floyd Tatem; Shop 56 - William Stepp; Shop 72 - Carl Swartz; Shop 99 - Janice Burda.

Church may increase VWC funding

Virginia Wesleyan College may get a 50 percent increase in the amount of funding it receives from the United Methodist Church in 1980 if the 1200 local churches throughout the state support action taken this month by the Virginia Annual Conference.

The 2000 ministerial and lay delegates attending the 197th session of the conference adopted a recommendation from the Division of Higher Education and Ministry to set the Educational Fund goal at $850,000 for next year. Virginia Wesleyan receives 14.5 percent of the funds received each year for the Educational Fund throughout the 370,000 member conference. Wesleyan expects to receive about $80,000 this year. Under the new recommendation, the amount for Virginia Wesleyan could be as much as $123,000 in 1980.

Virginia Wesleyan's 1979 appropriation from the Educational Fund represents about three percent of its total operating budget of $3,100,000.

A special committee on the relation of the conference to its schools, headed by the Rev. Robert T. Casey, minister of Larchmont United Methodist Church in Norfolk, gave its final report to the conference delegates.

The implementation of the report of this special committee, calling for "continuing conversation between the conference and the schools...making clear what each may expect of the other," has been referred to the conference's Division of Higher Education and Ministry.

Virginia Wesleyan College president Lambuth M. Clarke in responding to the special committee report said: "We are proud of our ties with the United Methodist Church and look forward to working with the conference in strengthening our mutually beneficial relationship." Virginia Wesleyan's student body includes 23 percent United Methodists.

In its evaluation of Virginia Wesleyan's relationship with the United Methodist Church, the special conference committee made the following statement, "The committee is impressed by the serious and consistent way in which Virginia Wesleyan proclaims and works at its relationship with the Church. The college seems to have a well-defined sense of educational mission as a liberal arts college with Christian orientation. The committee believes that the college is committed to the Church, that it works out of a Christian understanding of life, and that it merits the strong support of the Annual Conference."

Immunizations necessary to attend school

Immunizations -- it's a smart idea. It's also the law! To attend public school in Virginia, children must be immunized against polio, diphtheria, tetanus, whooping cough, rubella and measles. Children who have not been adequately immunized may not attend school.

The public schools of Virginia Beach encourage parents to take advantage of the summer vacation.

Contact your family physician or local health department today and protect your children and their friends.

Superintendent Brickell speaks to AASA in Denver

Dr. E.E. Brickell, Superintendent of Virginia Beach Public Schools, addressed a conference of the American Association of School Administrators (AASA) in Denver, July 2. His topic was "Eliminating Paperwork in Schools".

Dr. Brickell was invited to speak to the summer instructional conference in connection with his work as a member of AASA's National Committee on the Improvement of Learning. He was appointed to that committee last year. The committee deals primarily with the thrust of curriculum and instruction, and its objectives is to improve the general practice in management of both.

Streamlining the organizational setup and eliminating paperwork have been goals of Dr. Brickell since he became superintendent of public schools in Virginia Beach in 1968.

Meteorologists in more than 140 countries are now using 10 space satellites, 50 research ships, 110 aircraft, 300 high-altitude balloons, and 300 instrumented buoys to make about 40,000 weather observations a day.

Three ways you can slow it down this summer.

at a 78° setting.

By watching your thermostat, you'll save energy at a time when it's most important.

And you'll save money, too.
2. Do the big jobs early. Or late. We call it Hot Watch. The hours between 10 A.M. and 10 P.M. are the "peak load" hours, when the most electricity is being used and the chance of shortages is greatest.

So try to restrict your use of major appliances and hot water during these hours.

Do your baking and laundry before 10 A.M. Turn on the dishwasher just before you go to bed. Shower before 10 A.M. or after 10 P.M.

You won't be using less energy, but you'll be using it when we have power to spare. And that will reduce our need to build costly power plants.

3. Give your water heater a rest. It will save money and energy. With the exception of heating and cooling systems, the water heater is the biggest energy user in your home. So try your best to work it less.

Use your dishwasher and washing machine only for full loads. Wash clothes in cool or warm water instead of hot. Take showers instead of baths, and keep them short.

With your help we can save energy and make it through the summer. And that's important to all of us.

Vepco

Summer, when all the air conditioners are humming, is the time when our customers use more power than at any other time of year. To meet the demand this summer, you can be sure that we'll be doing everything we can to provide you with all the power you need. We'll be using our available units to capacity, and if necessary, we'll be buying power from our neighboring utilities.

If you pitch in by following the steps below, you can help us make it through the summer.

1. Don't overcool your home. Set your home air conditioner's thermostat at 78° or higher, or not more than 15° cooler than the temperature outside, whichever is the higher setting.

For every degree cooler than 78°, your air conditioner uses about 5% more energy. So a 73° setting means you're using 25% more energy than you would

The Lerner and Loewe musical, Brigadoon, opens at the Little Theatre of Virginia Beach on Friday, July 6 at 8:30 p.m.

Evening performances will continue through August 18 on Thursdays, Fridays and Saturdays at 8:30 p.m. Sunday matinees will be performed on July 15, July 29 and August 12, with curtain time at 3 p.m. Tickets are $4.25 for adults and $2.50 for students. Reservations may be made by calling the theatre box office at 428-9523.

When Brigadoon opened in Broadway, it met with instant critical and popular acclaim. Typical were the comments of Brooks Atkinson, drama critic for the "New York Times," who said, "This excursion into an imagined Scottish village is like an orchestration of the theatre's myriad arts, like a singing storybook for an idealized country fair of long ago." Show tunes from the production include "Almost Like Being In Love," "The Heather, On The Hill," and "Come To Me, Bend To Me."

The beach theatre production is directed by Liz Sills. Musical director is Sally Suter. Jack Bloom and Kenn Flynn play Tommy Albright and Jeff Douglas, two young New Yorkers who stumble by accident on "Brigadoon," a mystical village which comes to life for only one day every century.

Arlene Brooks plays Fiona MacLaren, the Scottish lass with whom Tommy falls in love. Other featured players are Tosh Brock as Jane Ashton, Bruce Jones as Harry Beaton, David Lang as Mr. Lundie, and Betty Hudson as Meg Brockie.

Other actors include Brenda Parise, Patrick Masterson, Lou Schlekau, Jerry Candrille, Ted

"It's Almost Like Being In Love," sing Arlene Brooks and Jack Bloom in Brigadoon, the summer musical now playing at the Little Theatre of Virginia Beach.

Kaufman, Kim Newsome, J. Justice and David Harper.

Dancers are Betty Barrett, Leigh Burchette, Cathy Callow, Ellen Duffy, Jeff Shaevel and Joyce Jerf.

Chorus members are Karol Cairns, Sarah Robinett, Marilyn Abernathy, Vicky Chamberlain, Donna Coner, Elizabeth Evans, Malia Skipper, Nancy Summers, Glenda Winstead, Walter Halldan and Scott Swanger.

The production staff includes Betty Gray, assistant director; Judi Hatcher, choreographer; Penny Martin, set designer; and Marilyn Deering, costumer.

The Little Theatre of Virginia Beach is located at 24th Street and Barbenton Drive, near the city's oceanfront resort area.

Sutton, managing partner of Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co. was elected as president for the group which is the consolidation of the Norfolk Symphony, Peninsula Symphony, and Virginia Beach Pops Symphonies. He succeeds John M. Hodgson, first president of V.O.G. Clay H. Barr, president of Cofers, Inc., will act as the executive vice president. Other officers elected are: R. Patrick Deans, managing partner of A. Lee Rawlings Co., treasurer; and George A. Wray Jr., secretary. Vice presidents include Mrs. Charles N. Cooper, Dr. James K. Davis, J. Riley Johnson, Mrs. Robert K.

Maddock, Mrs. H.T. Mahler and Mrs. B.R. Middleton. Allan G. Donn, Mrs. Stewart J. Fleming, John M. Hodgson, past president of the Norfolk Symphony, Mrs. Paul Camp Marks, James Q. Parnell Jr., Henry O. Pezzella, Mrs. J.W. Roebuck and Louis F. Ryan will serve on the executive committee. The merger of Tidewater's three symphony orchestras became a reality Dec. 18, 1978, when the boards of directors of the orchestras agreed to the merger and announced their plan to begin legal procedures to consolidate their operations and administrations. Under the confederation plan, all of the orchestras will utilize a central management headed by Francis Crociata, the current executive director of the Norfolk Symphony.

Colored glass of the depression era

So many people ask "What is that colored glass? Where did it come from?" The majority of the colored glass you see today in shops, shows and flea markets came to be during the depression era. This era covers the years from the middle 20's to late 40's.

There are around eighty major patterns and over a thousand other identified patterns plus many unidentified pattern. The colors used are pink, green, amber, blue, topaz, red, monox, black, Defite Ritz blue and burgundy.

Most of the glass was cheaply made pressed glass with flaws around the seam or mold lines. The glass was given as premium or awards at department stores, movie houses, 5 and 10 stores, in cereal boxes, etc. Besides dinner ware, items made were: ashtrays, lamps, dresser sets, vases, kitchenware etc.

Values for pieces of depression glass vary as to condition, pattern, availability and demand. The price trends for depression glass have no fluctuations. It only goes up and up each year with a steady continuing rise.

You will find a 10" plate in the "Lace Edge" pattern, mint condition, is priced around $6 because it is still available in the moderate demand, whereas the green "Mayfair" butterdish and cover is valued around $600 and up because of low availability and high demand.

To learn more about depression glass, check in your local library for books written by Gene Florence or Hazel Marie Weatherman.

If you are one of the few who hasn't seen depression glass, there will be a depression glass show at the Virginia Beach Dome in September. It will be your only chance this year to see a large area filled with nothing but beautiful colored and crystal glass!

A stately secretary is this week's featured antique. This authentic reproduction can be seen at Country Heritage, 947 Providence Square Center, Virginia Beach. During colonial days the secretary was not only viewed as a fine piece of furniture, it served as a protective case for the owner's books, which were precious possessions during that period.

Regulations cost money

The Senate of the United States, which would hold hearings if one member wanted to know with certainty on what day in December Christmas falls, is now probing what it calls "regulatory reforms."

So the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee will take millions of words of testimony, issue a long report on which dust will gather, and our honorable salons will go back to their constituencies wreathed in virtuous smiles.

What the voters will never be told is that simply operating these agencies now runs to $5.8 billion a year. Their rulings are costing an annual $116 billion. And who pays for it?

Not those horrible businessmen that the Carter administration is always berating. Professor Murray Weidenbaum, director of the Center of the Study of American Business at Washington University in St. Louis, has done the arithmetic and it adds up to "more than $550 for each man, woman and child in the nation"—a hidden tax imposed by federal regulation of some $2,200 a year for a family of four.

A good bit of that money is spent by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration, the Food and Drug Administration, the Environmental Protection Agency and the Consumer Product Safety Commission—all four of which shuffle each other's papers and come up with contradictory regulations.

What has been the result? In 1956 it cost $1.2 million to develop and test a new product. Today that cost is $21.6 million. The odds against a new product hitting the market today are 15,000 to 1.

This means that lots of people in research and development are out of work—and many more denied future employment—because who is going to plunk out that amount of money in order to produce something that will improve our way of life.

Agitation not solution

Independent truck operators are boiling mad about fuel shortages and high prices, but so are a lot of other people. With their wildcat strikes and blockades the truckers are only making a bad situation worse.

The truckers are mad at the oil companies for not supplying them with enough diesel fuel at prices they want to pay. They're mad at the government for not letting them raise their rates as much as they think is necessary to cover the higher cost of fuel. They're mad at the 55 mile per hour speed limit, and the rules that limit the size of the loads they can carry.

The "system" isn't working too well for anybody these days, but the truckers aren't doing anything that promises to fix it. Disrupting deliveries of food, fuel and other goods does not make those commodities any more plentiful or any cheaper. In fact, it can aggravate shortages that drive prices up.

There is enough public pressure on the oil industry and the government to straighten out their snafus in the way gasoline and diesel fuel is being produced, distributed and priced. The truckers have now made their point: the fuel problem and government regulations are working a special hardship on people in the transportation business.

The drivers should get back behind the wheel and join the rest of the country in making the best of it until things get straightened out.

Editor, Virginia Beach Sun:

My office has had a number of inquiries about the gasoline situation in our city. People are concerned and confused about the lack of allocated gasoline in our area.

Many service station dealers are having tough times because they do not think they are receiving their fair gasoline allocation. They have had to drastically cut their hours of operation, have had to lay off employees, and this imposes a financial strain on many of them. Some service station dealers are ready to close their stations because they are out of gasoline and are told they might not get another allocation until sometime "next month." They just cannot continue to operate their service stations under these conditions.

Our citizens here are trying to conserve gasoline because it is getting more expensive to buy per gallon and it is getting harder to find gasoline stations open. They get upset when their gasoline is low and they must go on a "hunt" to try to find a station that is open and pumping gasoline.

We have called Governor Dalton's office and he is sending a representative from the Energy Office in Richmond to meet with me at my office this week. This is a preventive measure we have taken because we want to make sure we don't have the long gasoline lines that California had, and we want to insure that we continue to have gasoline in this area so our citizens are able to get to and from work. Further, I want to go over the gasoline allocation situation with the energy representative to insure that our service station dealers in this area are getting their fair allocation of fuel.

I encourage the citizens of Virginia Beach and the service station dealers to contact me with recommendations and additional information concerning allocations which I could discuss with the representative from the Energy Office. You may call my office at 486-7711, or write to me at: 2420 Virginia Beach Boulevard, Virginia Beach, Va. 23544.

SOCIAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATION

Your number's up

By Harvey J. Ridinger, Field Representative

Evidence of birth

People have a tendency to put things off when they think that what they're going to do is going to be difficult.

Yet, they're happy when they face up to the problem and get the job done.

How many times have you heard someone say, "If I knew how easy it would be, I'd have done it sooner!"

Some people put off getting evidence of their birth to qualify for social security benefits, even when they know they plan to retire in six months or so.

Actually, most people will need evidence of their birth for many types of transactions, including social security benefits.

We recommend that every member of the family obtain evidence of their birth long before they need it.

This evidence should be placed in a safe place along with the family's other valuable papers.

The people working in the Norfolk Social Security office would like to help all of you to obtain this valuable evidence.

To do this they have gathered the following information to assist you in getting your birth certificate:

If you were born in Virginia, on or after June 14, 1912, your birth record is probably on file at the Department of Health, James Madison building, Box 1000, Richmond, Virginia 23208. (They also have some records from 1853-1896).

When you write them, you should include a check or money order, payable to the Department of Health, in the amount of $3.

Be sure to tell them your father's name, your mother's maiden name, your place of birth, and your date of birth.

If you aren't sure what date you were born be sure to tell them the possible dates of your birth.

The Department of Health will normally mail you what is known as a short form birth certificate.

If you want a long form birth certificate - that is, one that includes the name of your parents and place of birth - you must inform the Department of Health that you are requesting the long form birth certificate.

If you were born in Virginia before June 12, 1912, in one of the areas shown below, you should contact the Health Department in those communities.

If you write one of these places and they notify you that your record is not available, there are other valuable documents to show the date of your birth.

Many churches have records of a person's baptism. If you were baptized before you were five years old you should contact the church librarian and request a record of your baptism.

Ask the church to specify the date the record was made and the date of birth shown on the record, as well as the names of your parents. This is an excellent record.

If there is no public or church record of your birth, many times you can obtain evidence of your age by requesting the bureau of census, in Pittsburg, Kansas, to send you a copy of the census taken in 1900 or 1910, etc.

The Norfolk Social Security office has forms you can use. If you wish a copy of this form call 441-3401 and request it. The form number is BC-600.

There are many other sources of valuable documents that the social security administration accepts as evidence of age.

For example: school records, voting records, family records (including Bibles), marriage records, etc.

They must, however, have a birth or baptismal record, if one exists. The employees at the social security office in Norfolk are pleased to answer your questions and to offer you any assistance they can. Please call 441-3401 for any information or assistance you require.

TIDEWATER COMMUNITY COLLEGE-VA. BEACH

Today College Counts

By G. William Bridges
Director of Continuing Education

The continuing education unit

The Office of Continuing Education at Tidewater Community College offers individuals, businesses, industry, civic organizations, and agencies of the city, state and federal governments an opportunity to recognize education and training programs which do not fall into the category of academic college credit programs.

The Continuing Education Unit (C.E.U.) is a measure of participation in an organized educational experience under responsible sponsorship, capable direction, and qualified instruction. One C.E.U. is awarded for every ten contact hours of instruction.

In addition to the College's Spectrum program which offers credit in various community education courses each quarter, the C.E.U. can be obtained for special interest courses.

For example, businesses which have established in-house training programs can apply for C.E.U. credit through the college. The Office of Continuing Education has information on requirements and procedures for those interested in obtaining C.E.U. credit for in-house training programs.

The C.E.U. is becoming widely recognized and used in employee upgrading and promotion within business, industry and government. School systems are also using the C.E.U. in teacher certification programs.

The Virginia Beach Campus has C.E.U. programs in cooperation with the General Hospital of Virginia Beach, Medical Center Hospitals, and the Comprehensive Mental Health Services of Virginia Beach. The Princess Anne Business and Professional Women's Club and the college awarded C.E.U.'s to participants in a Job Exploration Seminar during the past winter quarter.

To have a course or program approved for C.E.U. credit, the interested individual or organization must submit a course outline or proposed program of study to the Director of Continuing Education for evaluation. In order to provide adequate time for planning, administrative processing and approval, the proposal should be submitted at least one month prior to the desired starting date for the course.

The proposal should include the following information: the name of the requesting organization, the title of the program or class, objectives, rationale, brief description, outline of content, format—whether conference, workshop, class, etc.—audience, estimated number of participants, tentative dates, location, total hours of instruction, program coordinator, copies of class materials and bibliography, and copy of evaluation form to be used.

The Office of Continuing Education at the Virginia Beach campus can act as consultant to any individual or group which wishes to explore the possibility of establishing a C.E.U. credit course. The office can assist in program or course development, identification and contracting of instructors, scheduling of classes and development of a proposal which will meet C.E.U. criteria on first submission.

If your organization or business could benefit from a C.E.U. program, contact the Virginia Beach campus Office of Continuing Education at 427-3070.

It is our goal to provide educational opportunities to the Virginia Beach community in as many ways as possible. The C.E.U., offered for worthwhile educational programs outside the college's standard academic curriculum, is one way of meeting that goal.

Switching fuels? -- Saving pennies now could cost you dollars later

By JASON GAERTNER

Environmental Protection Agency

As gasoline prices across the nation climb to the $1.00 per gallon level, more and more drivers are turning to fuel-switching to save a few pennies on each gallon of gasoline they buy.

About 10 percent of the nation's motorists who drive late model cars which require unleaded fuel have switched from unleaded gasoline to cheaper leaded gasoline, according to a report released by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA).

EPA's Mobile Source Air Pollution Control Office, Washington, D.C., which released the report, stated that the "saving" of an average of five cents per gallon at the pump could show up as expensive maintenance costs in the long run.

Many late-model cars which require unleaded fuel, for example, only require oil changes about every 7,000 miles and spark plug changes about every 30,000 miles. When the fuel is switched, however, the changes may have to be made about twice as often to ensure that the engine is operating properly. More frequent oil and spark plug changes, which increase maintenance costs, are partially due to the combustion byproducts of lead and other additives in leaded fuel.

The lifetime, or efficiency, of other car parts such as exhaust systems and carburetor may also adversely be affected by putting leaded fuel in an "unleaded fuel only" vehicle.

Tests by a major refiner on a fleet of vehicles in 1972 showed that maintenance costs, averaged over a car's lifetime, were about 4.5 cents per gallon higher for leaded fuel. This would be about seven cents per gallon in today's economy.

Health effects

The EPA is concerned about fuel switching for the same reason the agency controls lead in gasoline -- health effects and effects on auto emission control systems. Most American-made cars that were built since 1975 have been designed by auto manufacturers to use unleaded gasoline, but only as a way to keep emission control systems working efficiently to minimize automobile pollution.

The majority of cars requiring unleaded gas use a catalytic converter in the exhaust system as the primary means of pollution control. The converter, therefore, is the heart of the auto emission control system. A system which is part of the controls which were designed to reduce pollution and thus protect public health.

When a catalytic converter is poisoned by leaded fuel, unburned and unhealthy gases, such as hydrocarbons and carbon monoxide which are normally "captured" by the converter, are spewed forth into the air as part of exhaust emissions.

Fuel switching also increases emissions of airborne lead, additives put in leaded gasoline to reduce deposits caused by the combustion of lead additive, and possibly oxides of nitrogen.

Lead is a toxic material, and EPA has established a health-based National Ambient Air Quality Standard for it. The EPA's "phase down" regulations to reduce the average lead level in all gasoline are designed to reduce public health problems associated with airborne lead.

Lead poisoning

Fuel switching, by increasing these emissions, can lead to adverse health effects in human beings. Airborne lead can lead to neurological damage, as well as damage to the kidney and reproductive and gastrointestinal systems. High levels of exposure can cause brain disease, anemia, palsy and can be fatal. Children are particularly susceptible to lead poisoning. Ninety percent of airborne lead comes from auto exhausts.

Carbon monoxide combines with red blood cells and prevents them from absorbing oxygen. Mental dullness and poorer vision can result from exposure to low levels of the gas. Exposure to higher levels can put a strain on the heart. Smokers and persons with heart disease are particularly susceptible. Heavy concentrations of carbon monoxide can be fatal. More than 71 percent of carbon monoxide emissions comes from auto exhausts.

Hydrocarbons combine with nitrogen oxides in the presence of sunlight to form smog, which causes eye and lung irritations which may lead to headaches, eye discomfort, visual problems, coughing, chest discomfort and fatigue. Persons with asthma and other lung diseases are particularly susceptible to smog. Thirty-three percent of total hydrocarbon emissions comes from auto exhausts.

The EPA is also concerned with additives, such as lead "scavengers," because the chemicals have been shown to cause cancer in laboratory tests with animals. The EPA is concerned with any increase in the amount of a cancer-causing substance emitted into the air.

Switching illegal

In addition to the adverse health and environmental effects of fuel switching, the practice is against the law. EPA regulations prohibit service station attendants from causing or allowing leaded fuel to be put into a car designed for unleaded under threat of up to a $10,000 fine.

As a safeguard against inadvertently using leaded gasoline, cars requiring unleaded gasoline have restricted fuel filler inlets which will accept small diameter spouts dispensing unleaded gas, but will not accept larger diameter spouts dispensing leaded gasoline.

Federal law prohibits fleet owners, commercial repair facilities, dealers and automobile manufacturers from altering the inlets or removing unleaded gasoline labels from cars, but it does not prohibit such acts by an individual to his own car. A majority of the states, however, have laws which prohibit individuals from disabling or removing emission control parts and/or operating cars with emission control parts removed.

What is to prevent a driver from operating a vehicle with an emission control system that has been disabled or tampered with?

Because the air in many areas of the country is not as clean as it should be, many major metropolitan areas will be starting auto inspection and maintenance (I&M) programs in the near future. The programs will usually include an emissions test. If the vehicle fails the test because emissions control parts were disabled or removed, these parts may have to be fixed or replaced, and the test passed, before new license plates can be obtained.

Notes from the shelter industry

Small cracks in concrete can be easily repaired

By LIN J. COOPER

Director of Communications Tidewater Builders Association

One of the home maintenance jobs that frequently surfaces with both new homes and older ones is the repair of cracks in concrete driveways, walks and steps.

Unfortunately, cracking is one of the characteristics of concrete, and a method of entirely eliminating cracks is still being sought. However, small cracks can and should be repaired by the homeowner.

This week's glossary of home maintenance ideas takes up the care of DRIVEWAYS, WALKS & STEPS.

Concrete. Your builder has anticipated stresses on concrete driveways, walks, and steps and has provided contraction and expansion joints to minimize cracking. Unanticipated cracking sometimes occurs from unforeseeable conditions, such as severe frost. Ordinarily, the cracks are of no serious consequence, but the appearance of the affected surface will be greatly improved if the cracks are patched.

Minor repairs in concrete can be made by following these steps:

1. Roughen edges of crack if they are smooth.

2. Clean out loose material and dirt.

3. Soak the old concrete thoroughly. (The crack should be sopping wet, but water should not be standing in it.)

4. Fill the crack with patching cement slightly higher than the crack to allow for shrinkage. Commercially prepared patching mixtures need only the addition of water, but be sure the mixture you buy is appropriate for concrete.

5. Cover and keep damp for several days. The longer the drying time, the stronger the patch will be.

6. When the cement has partially set, remove excess cement with a wire brush. At this stage, the surface of the cement appears sandy.

Macadam. If any spots of oil, or similar substance are dropped or spilled on a backtopped driveway, walkway, or parking area, wash them off immediately with sudsy water and rinse. These liquids can seriously damage the macadam. Don't let sharp objects such as outdoor furniture legs and bicycle stands rest on the macadam because they will poke holes in it. Never burn leaves or anything else on your driveway or parking area.

Protect your driveways, walks, and steps by removing snow and ice promptly. If a thin layer of ice cannot be removed, use a "kitty litter" or sand for traction. They are safe for driveways, walks, steps, and nearby grass and shrubs.

Do not apply salt in any form. Repeated thawing and freezing with salt and chemicals can damage concrete, brick, mortar, and macadam, and salt will kill grass, shrubs, and trees.

If you use sand, be sure to provide an outdoor foot mat to prevent having it tracked into the house. Another mat just inside the door will provide added protection for your floors.

Horticulture field day

Chuck Elstrodt, extension specialist at the Virginia Truck and Ornamentals Research Station in Diamond Springs Road, checks the progress of a row of "Holiday Time" peppers, one of the many All American Award Winner varieties growing on the station's 55 acres. A Horticulture Field Day will be held at the station on July 11 from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. The event is open to the public. Those attending will have a chance to tour the facility's flower garden, ornamental plantings and the 4-H youth garden. The 1980 All American Award Winner plants can be viewed. There will also be an information booth on canning and freezing and pressure gauge testing will be conducted.

Boxwood is a favorite shrub in Virginia

Extension Specialist

Boxwood is such a common shrub in the Virginia landscape, you might think it is native of this region. Actually, boxwood was brought to America in early colonial times and immediately became a very important plant for southern gardens.

The center of interest for boxwood is probably the Chesapeake Bay region, but it has been planted throughout the entire southeastern United States. Some of the finest box hedges and specimens are to be found in famous old gardens in Virginia and neighboring states.

Boxwood may be used in the landscape for many purposes. Dwarf types are fine as edging plants, and as low, clipped hedges in a formal garden. The larger species are fine in the foundation planting, as a clipped or natural hedge, as specimen plants, or for topiary training.

Box shrubs grow well in acid or alkaline soil, as long as it is well drained. An organic mulch such as sawdust, peat moss, bark, or wood chips should be used because the roots need cool, moist growing conditions.

Boxwood plants have a dense, fibrous root system which should be protected by a soil ball during the transplanting operation. Maintain adequate soil moisture at all times to promote vigorous growth, which will be more resistant to disease and insect pests.

Cold, windy weather may cause the drying and browning of boxwood foliage during the winter, especially in elevated locations or northern regions. The damage may be reduced by maintaining a good moisture supply in the soil during the winter, enclosing the plants with evergreen boughs, burlap, or spraying with an antidesiccant.

Boxwood shrubs respond very well to pruning. They may be trained as formal hedges, or for artistic topiary effects. To secure a natural, informal shape, head-back and thin out the top half of the bush. This will allow light to penetrate and cause leaf growth along the branches.

The Common Box has many varieties which vary in height from 2 to 10 feet or more. The Welleri selection grows about 4 feet tall and retains an attractive green color during the winter. It is broader than tall at maturity.

Suffruticosa is a true edging box and is one of the smallest and most popular. It is very compact and slow growing. The plants require many years to reach a height of 2 feet. Some 150-year-old plants are not more than 3 feet tall. This selection has been used in European gardens for centuries and is sometimes called English Box.

The Littleleaf Box, Buxus microphylla, is another useful variety. It originated in Japan and has leaves somewhat smaller than the Common Box.

The Korean variety of Littleleaf Box is one of the hardest of all boxwood shrubs. Unfortunately, the foliage turns brown in winter. The Wintergreen Box is a selected variety of this species from Manchuria which retains its green foliage color throughout the winter. The plants reach a height of about 2 feet.

The Kingsville Dwarf Box is a selection from Compacta, a dwarf strain of Littleleaf Box. This variety is one of the smallest of all Boxwoods, 12 to 18" high.

Bloomin' cousins

It's unlikely that roses and raspberries would have much in common, but they do.

These two share a kind of cousin-like relationship by belonging to the same plant family, and they both have thorns.

The rose, of course, is considered the prettiest and the raspberry the best to eat, but the opposite could be true.

Roses (wild bushes, too) produce a fruit called rose hips which can be picked and made into a delicious jelly, while raspberry blooms are often used as a centerpiece.

Raspberries, blackberries and many other wild plants also produce crops of juicy berries each summer.

These are sought by outdoor enthusiasts who process the fruit into home-made jellies, jams and wines, or simply eat the berries with cream and sugar.

Berries have long been a staple food in America.

Indians dried and mixed them with dried meat to make "pemmican," a nutritious food that was kept in skin bags.

Berries are high in vitamin C and are a healthful food.

Look for raspberries, blackberries and wild roses in old fields which have been left to revert to a natural state.

These plants need a plentiful supply of water, so fields around large reservoirs are likely places to search.

Be sure to protect your arms and legs against thorn scratches by wearing a long-sleeved shirt and loose, heavy trousers.

Not only do these blackberries look ripe and ready for eating, they're easy to pick, too, because the vines are thornless! They're a special variety being developed and tested at the Virginia Truck and Ornamentals Research Station on Diamond Springs Road.

Beach gardens need attention during July

Randal W. Jackson and Gregory L. Loneragan of the Virginia Beach Department of Agriculture / Cooperative Extension Service offer these suggestions for Beach gardeners in July:

Strawberry plantings can be fed this month if the growth does not appear as healthy as it should. Broadcast three pounds of 5-10-5 per 100 sq. ft. over the bed. Water the plants after fertilizing to wash any residue from the leaves.

Control weeds in strawberries by pulling or shallow cultivation. Strawberries have shallow roots and can easily be damaged.

Fall vegetable gardening is very important in Southeastern Virginia. Some of our highest quality vegetables are harvested after August.

To determine the time to plant a particular vegetable for the latest harvest in your area, you need to know the average killing frost date and the number of days to maturity for the variety you are growing. The average frost date in Virginia Beach is November 20.

Subtracting the number of days to maturity from the date of killing frost will give the last date to plant. Since crop maturity is slower in cool temperatures it is wise to allow two additional weeks for the crop to mature.

Onions should be harvested when 2/3 of the tops have fallen over. Careful handling to avoid bruising helps control storage rots.

Onions may be pulled and left in the field for 3-7 days with the tops attached. Cover bulbs to avoid sunscald.

Tops may be left on or cut off. A small quantity of onions may be hung up to dry.

Bermudagrass and zoysia lawns may need to be fertilized this month. These are warm-season grasses and need to be fed during the summer months. If necessary these turf species can still be established this month, but don't delay.

Water your lawn and garden early in the day. Watering late or at night may increase disease problems.

Bitter cucumbers may be the result of dry weather or age. The new hybrids don't seem to have a big problem with a bitter flavor developing.

Blossom end rot of tomato, pepper, and eggplant can be caused by too much water, too little water, or a lack of calcium in the soil.

Tall flowers in the garden may need to be staked to reduce breakage by wind, especially during our summer thunderstorms. Any small but strong wood or bamboo stakes are suitable for this purpose. The stems should be tied very loosely to the stake with twine, tape or twist-type wire.

The following flowers can be successfully dried in the appropriate ways.

In media (Silica Gel, cat litter or cornmeal plus Borax): bachelor's button; common stock; cosmos; dianthus; gloriosa daisy; lupine; marigold and zinnias. In air (hand upside down): annual baby's breath; celosia; gaillardia and strawflower. Mulches can alter the environment your plants grow in. On a clear, sunny day with the air temperature at 82°F, temperature recordings were taken four feet above different types of mulches. The results were:

no mulch.... 84 degrees paper..... 88 degrees
black plastic. 88 degrees smoke gray plastic.... 92 degrees

clear plastic 101 degrees
Black plastic had less than a 5 percent increase in air temperature, whereas clear plastic pushed the temperature up 20 percent. Black plastic also blocks light critical for growth. With plant canopies averaging two to four feet high, reducing air temperature in that area directly reduces plant stress.

Easter lilies can be planted in the ground and left for many years before they need to be dug up and replanted. This method, however, will not produce flowers in time for Easter.

Insects are not always detrimental to mankind. There are many ways in which insects are beneficial or useful to man.

Shellac is the secretion from a scale insect of India. Tannic acid derived from insect galls on plants has been used centuries to tan the skins of animals for leather or furs. The foundations of modern genetics have been derived from studies of the pea fruit fly. Also, insects destroy various weeds in the same ways that they injure crop plants. The list goes on, but suffice it to say that insects, while usually viewed as a curse, do have their commendable traits.

For those species which give little or no benefit the following controls can be used on flowers and ornamentals.

aphids and whiteflies: malathion (Cythion) or diazinon (Spectracide) caterpillars: carbaryl (Sevin), diazinon (Spectracide) or Bacillus thuringiensis (Dipel, Thuricide) spider mites: dicofol (Kelthane)
Aphids, caterpillars and whiteflies can be controlled with acephate (Orthene), but trial spray first to check for undesirable side effects.

Do not spray diazinon on gardenias or dicofol on roses as they may burn the foliage. Read the entire label carefully and follow directions.

The average mature maple tree will transpire

(lose water to the atmosphere though the leaves) 58 gallons of water per hour. Hence, be sure your ornamentals receive adequate water during the summer, especially newly transplanted ones.

Beach, blind & boat:

1979 fishing license expired - flounder still number one

By ED LEWIS

Virginia Beach Sun Outdoor's Writer

If you haven't renewed your fishing license you had better do so. The Virginia 1979 freshwater fishing license expired at midnight June 30 and they are required for all persons 16 years to 65 years of age. If you are over 65 you can apply for a life time license with the state for a fee of $5.00 and proof of age. The regular license is also $5.00 but is only good from July 1 of one year to June 30 of the following year, regardless of when they are purchased.

In Virginia there were over 449,000 licensed hunters last year which, along with the other tags, stamps, and permits they purchased, added over $4 million to the state game commission fund. In addition, there were some 431,000 licensed fishermen in Virginia in 1978. They, in turn, paid in over two million dollars in license and other fees to enjoy their sport.

Many people think that getting the license is a big hassle and that the state should not charge for the privileges of hunting and fishing since it is a natural resource. However, were it not for this revenue, the states supply of fish and game would soon dwindle to nothing. The revenue brought in is used for such projects as stocking lakes and rivers with fish, building public boat ramps and other projects that help conserve our natural resources and insure plenty of fish and game in the seasons to come.

In June the Virginia Game Commission's Fish Division released more than 135,000 fingerling (approximately 2" long) striped bass into Lake Anna. According to Biologist Charles Stedd, these fish should start showing up in fishermen's creels in about three years. Such projects as this are taking place all over the state and are a necessary (though costly) measure which insures fish in the future.

Getting on to some of the local fishing news, I had the pleasure of accompanying Danny McCoy, Bennie Williams and Jack Williams on a fishing trip to the Eastern Shore this past Saturday. We left Saturday morning and went to Quinby, Va. which is a small fishing hamlet just south of Wachapreague. We were prepared to do some serious flounder fishing and that is exactly what we did. We caught a nice mess of flounder on minnows backed up with a strip of squid. We drifted across the channel and flats behind the old Paramore Island Coast Guard Station, and there seemed to be plenty of flounder in that area. We had the best results on the flood tide. Once the tide slackened off and started to ebb, so did the fish. You might keep this in mind if you plan on going over there.

The seaside of the Eastern Shore seemed to be the only hot spot on that side of the bay this past weekend. Emmet Bailey of Bailey's Bait and Tackle at Cape Charles told me that the trout and cobia have been very slow this past week.

Area piers on the western shore report the fishing slow but better than last week. They are yielding spot, croaker, trout and flounder, but not in any great quantity. There does seem to be plenty of crabs for you crab lovers. Herman Garringer at Harrison's Pier told me that there are so many crabs the fishermen are having a hard time keeping bait on.

On the off shore wrecks the charter boats are doing real well on the sea bass, and both D&M Marina and the Rudee Inlet Sports Fishing Center report their off-shore boats doing real well on bluefin tuna and large blues.

Down at Nags Head the grey trout are still causing a little excitement. Mike at Tatem's Bait and Tackle Shop told me that over the weekend there were plenty of grey trout being caught at Oregon Inlet. The best lure was a lime green twister tail, and Mike said they sold a ton of them. On Jennette's Pier, Mike said they caught nice croakers and a few trout Sunday night, but that the rest of the bottom fishing was a little slow.

On the freshwater scene, the fishing is still pretty good. Otis Nelson at the Northwest River Camp grounds told me that there are plenty of bass, bream and catfish for those that know how to catch them. He told me that R.D. Zimmerman and his wife, Barbara, of Chesapeake, went fishing over the weekend for bream. They were using a fly rod with crickets and caught more than just a nice string of bream. Mr. Zimmerman landed a 6 lb. 14 oz. bass and Barbara hauled in a 4 lb. 10 oz. catfish. I can't think of a better way to top off a creel of fish than that.

Rev. Carter, one of the regulars at the campgrounds, had a pretty good day Friday. He brought back eight bass and gave the four largest to Otis. Rev. Carter is one of the more avid bass fishermen in the area. He tries to make it down to the camp grounds at least three times a week.

Being an outdoorsman and professional diver, I get more opportunity than most occasional weekend fishermen to see the litter and garbage that is discarded in our waterways. Many people think that the occasional beer or soda can they throw over the side will sink and never be noticed. That is a bunch of bull. The majority will end up on our public beaches. —Even the cans and bottles you sink will move a great deal. Their cylinder shape make it easy for tidal currents to roll them along the bottom, and a large number of them will end up on the beach. By carrying a litter bag and disposing of your garbage properly, you are doing your share to keep our beaches and waterways clean. In doing so you also set the example for those fishing with you or near you. It leaves a good impression, even though others might not admit it at the time.

If you are planning an outerbanks fishing trip, here is a timetable for the week of July 6 through July 12. The table is computed for Oregon Inlet. To obtain Cape Hatteras subtract 41 minutes for high tide and +58 minutes for low tide. Have a safe and prosperous Councilman John A. Baum suggested the changes included in the approved ordinance.

Among other requirements are that the minimum site area per unit is at least one acre.

The ordinance also requires that trailers must be removed when the farming operation is discontinued.

Switching fuels now can cost you dollars later

If gas switching was the reason why the vehicle failed the inspection, the catalytic converter may have to be replaced. This may cost more than one hundred dollars.

In addition, the car's emission warranty may not cover the cost because the catalytic converter section of the warranty was probably voided by the switching.

Performance unaffected

Some people also switch fuels to improve their car performance, or to get more miles per gallon. Many believe that by switching to a leaded fuel they will reduce knocking, the sound heard if the fuel pre-ignites in the engine's cylinders.

Knocking, however, has nothing to do with whether a fuel is unleaded, and can be reduced only by switching to a higher octane fuel.

As far as fuel economy is concerned, fuel switching is not likely to have any effect. Recent fuel economy tests, using more than six brands of gasoline, showed that leaded fuel gave an average of 14.7 miles per gallon. Unleaded fuel gave an average of 14.9.

Unleaded gasoline costs more because it must go through a further refinement than leaded gas. Additional costs are also incurred because unleaded gas must be "protected" from leaded fuels in the distribution process.

Even though the cost of leaded gasoline is lower in cost by a few pennies per gallon at the pump than unleaded gasoline, these are the results of those savings:

- Vehicle maintenance costs will probably increase.
- If the vehicle is rejected by an auto emissions inspection and maintenance program, enforced repairs may result.
- Vehicle performance will not be improved.
- The disabling of the vehicle's catalytic converter defeats a vital portion of the nation's program to clean up the air.

If you have further questions about fuel switching or emissions control tampering, contact James Gouvas, Environmental Protection Specialist, Air Quality Monitoring Branch, U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, 6th and Walnut Streets, Philadelphia, PA 19106: 215/597-4721.

*Warm weather and holidays make people more mobile. If friends are about to pop in on short notice, gather everything that's out of place and dump it into an empty basket you keep in the cleaning closet. Wipe ashtrays, stack newspapers, plump pillows. Give the bathroom and kitchen a once over. Wipe countertops clean. Close the doors of rooms you don't want on display. Relax.

*It's ice cream season for kids (and adults). That can mean sticky stains on carpets and sofas. Floor-care experts suggest sponging the stain with cool water. If a greasy stain remains, sponge with grease solvent. Let it dry and repeat if necessary. Vacuum the residue.

*This is the month that house crickets start calling. To destroy them, apply a lindane or malathion spray in cracks where the crickets can hide, around baseboards and in closets. Try to prevent their entry by tightening windows, doors and screens.

*Remove sand from tents, blankets and sleeping bags with the crevice tool and dusting brush of your vacuum, making sure such equipment is dry beforehand. The dusting brush of your vacuum cleaner will keep your picnic and patio equipment clean and your screens dust-free in between washings.

*Grass, flower and leaf stains are a common occurrence in the summer. To remove them from washable and non-washable textiles, sponge with alcohol. Then dilute with a solution of two parts water to one part acetate. Test colors beforehand to make sure they won't bleed.

The EXTENSION

People
ASK

"How can I get rid of mildew?"
"I want to grow pomegranate trees in my yard, is this possible?"
"My fireplace has a built up layer of soot, what can I do?"

These are some of the many questions "The Extension People" can answer for you. We want to encourage you to participate in this news column by sending us any questions you may have relating to home economics, horticulture, agriculture or 4-H youth programs. Here are answers to this week's questions.

Q: How do you can or freeze the new variety of sugar snap peas?

A: Canning is not recommended for this variety of edible-podded pea. The high heat during processing affects the fiber in the pod flesh and they lose their crispness. Freezing helps to retain its fine flavor. They can be left whole or broken into bite size pieces if over 3 inches long. Remove the string and blanch 2 minutes. Drain, chill and package.

Q: My fescue lawn has developed brown circular areas, what is the problem?

A: Sounds like you have a disease known as Brown Patch. This fungi is common on fescue, and has been especially bad this year with our warm temperatures and rainfall. Keep the fescue mowed at 2 and a half to 3 inches, do not fertilize, and do not water late in the day or at night. If the problem becomes severe, you may want to use a lawn fungicide.

Q: What is the best control for Japanese Beetles?

A: Several applications of carbaryl (sevin) or methoxychlor at two week intervals should help control the adult. Most of the Japanese beetle's life is spent in the soil as a grub. Grubs feed on the roots of grasses and shrubs. The use of milky spore disease powder in August is the best means of controlling the grub stage.

Auto repair act protects consumers

The Virginia Automobile Repair Facilities Act became law July 1, 1979. The Better Business Bureau urges all consumers to become familiar with this new law and to understand their rights and responsibilities. The Auto Repair Facilities Act provides that:

- a written estimate be given upon request if repairs will exceed $25.00.
- if a charge is to be made for the estimate or diagnosis you shall be advised as to the total amount of the charge before the estimate is given.

• estimates include the cost of labor and parts, stated separately. It must also give a description of the problem or work as described or authorized by you, and include estimated completion time.

• repair bills not exceed estimate by more than ten percent unless you have authorized additional work.

• consumers be offered the return of all replaced parts, except trade-in or warranty parts.

• written estimates must be made available, at the minimum, between the hours of 10 a.m. and 4 p.m. on work days.

When looking for an automobile repair facility, the Better Business Bureau suggests that you shop around and get several estimates. You may be able to narrow down the field if you have an idea of what type of work your car needs.

If it is just routine maintenance, you probably could have this done at a conventional neighborhood gas station. On heavier work, you may take your car back to your dealer or look for an independent garage or specialty shop.

For a company reliability report on the automobile repair facility of your choice, contact the Better Business Bureau at: 627-5651 Southside 851-9101 Peninsula Restaurant-goers. Taxi-riders. Shoppers.

Comprehensive Plan guides city land use

Parkway from Salem Road to Independence Boulevard to accommodate the controlled access nature of this roadway through a rapidly developing area.

Increasing Lynnhaven Parkway from 80 feet to 110 feet from Pottery Road to Holland Road to provide for the level of traffic to be generated by the Lynnhaven Mall and Oceana West Industrial Park.

Including a grade-separated interchange at the intersection of Holland Road and Independence Boulevard to allow for a fly-over structure.

Including Shipp's Corner Road from Holland Road to London Bridge Road as a 66-foot right-of-way.

Increasing North Landstown Road from 90 feet to 110 feet between Holland Road and Princess Anne Road.

Some residential development is recommended in an AICUZ noise zone. Scott explained that he didn't "see AICUZ as a substitute for land use."

The Kempsville area, he said, is not capable of handling higher density development than it now has. Kempsville bears the additional burden of handling all the traffic headed toward the city's one intersection with Interstate 64.

Kempsville Borough, itself, has grown from 33,000 in 1970 to 75,000 today. There will be a definite continuation of the residential development trend in the next two years.

In other areas:

Bayfront - basically residential, not a particularly rapidly growing study area mostly located in a flood plain.

Courthouse-Sandbridge - This is the area where critical important decisions will be made, Scott said. The proposals for the area are based on an analysis of future roads to take care of the level of development which is recommended at four units per acre east of Princess Anne Road and north of the proposed alignment of False Cape Parkway; two units per acre south of False Cape Parkway and north of Princess Anne Road and Sandbridge Road and west of the Lago Mar subdivision.

Commercially-zoned land near the Nimmo Church, is better suited for low density residential use, according to the Plan. A substantial amount of the study area lies within the 100-year flood plain and a restrictive easement the Navy is contemplating for the area south of Shipp's Corner (364 acres) will restrict use of that land to agricultural or industrial.

Recommended changes in road plans include: Increasing Dam Neck Road from a 90-foot right of way to 110 feet, west of General Booth Boulevard.

Adding a north-south 90 foot arterial east of Oceana Boulevard between False Cape Parkway and Dam Neck Road.

Realigning General Booth Boulevard to follow the existing alignment of Oceana Boulevard as far south as False Cape Parkway.

Removing the controlled access designation of False Cape Parkway east of Oceana Boulevard.

Reducing Princess Anne Road south of Nimmo Church from 110 feet to 90 feet.

Reducing West Neck Road from 90 feet to 66 feet.

Help your pet beat the heat during warm summer months

The Animal Assistance League of Virginia, Inc., located at 421 Pallets Road in Virginia Beach, has these tips for making your pet comfortable during the hot summer months:

- All animals should have a pan of fresh water nearby at all times, especially in hot weather.
- Dogs should be kept in the shade or in the house during a hot spell.
- Have your dog checked for heart worms. The mosquito bite causes heart worms and this is the season for them.
- Get heart worm preventative medication best suited for your pet from your veterinarian and give it to him every day through November.
- Leave your dog at home during the hot weather. If you must take it in the car and leave it there, never close your car windows. Park in the shade and leave windows open enough so your pet gets air and not so much that he can jump out or be stolen. Pets die in hot closed cars in the summer heat. This is a terrible death.

Research provides new hope

The war on cancer is being waged with chemistry—and we could be winning, as illustrated at the recent American Chemical Society-Chemical Society of Japan Congress in Hawaii.

There, Dr. Tasneem A. Khwaja of the University of Southern California at Los Angeles told how mistletoe is providing scientists with an alkaline extract effective against leukemia in mice.

A platinum anticancer agent safer and more effective in preliminary animal tests than related drugs recently cleared for clinical use, was discussed by Dr. Yoshinori Kidani of Nagoya City University in Japan. Dr. Kidani and his associates report much lower kidney toxicity in mice using the new experimental drug than all platinum drugs tested so far.

A series of new drugs is wiping out malaria, herpes virus and penicillin-resistant gonorrhea in animal and bacterial tests, said Dr. Daniel L. Klayman of Walter Reed Army Institute of Research. A whole spectrum of kindred drugs, not just a single agent, display potent activity against dangerous strains of penicillin-resistant gonorrhea. And forms of malaria resistant to quinine-derived drugs are succumbing to thiosimicrazones developed by Dr. Klayman and his colleagues.

Get the most out of your CB; avoid fuel crunch

Spot fuel shortages and service station closings will complicate highway travel this summer, so Motorola Inc., a major U.S. maker of citizen's band radios, offers some tips on using CBs to help motorists steer clear of problems.

- Listen more and talk less. CBers can learn where to buy gas locally just by listening to channel 19 which is popular with long distance travelers.
- "Pull in Your..." (listen only to local signals) by turning down the squelch until the radio is quiet. Then, slowly turn it up until the first signal is heard. You've cut out interfering signals and noise.

- Reduce the reception range by turning down the RF gain control and flip and local/distance switch to 'local.'

- To increase reception range on radios with IF, and RF gain controls, leave the squelch and RF gain wide open. Then, adjust the IF to reduce interference, letting only the strongest signals in.

There are effective ways for transmitting. Ask oncoming rather than parallel traffic for gas and road information. Start on channel 19, then move to channels above 23.

New features on CB radios, make CB talking easier. Pre-amplified batteries amplify the user's voice for maximum talk power without picking up background noise, too.

Radios with noise reduction systems make reception more clear, too, even in crowded areas.

Managing water

At least 80 percent of the drinking water produced by most American communities is not used for drinking at all. Instead, it's used in industry and irrigation, washing cars and cleaning floors. In a recent report, the experts at the American Chemical Society, a leading scientific organization, pointed out that highly treated wastewater could be an alternative supply for these needs, doing away with a lot of water wasting. This cannot, however, be put into effect very easily under our existing water control system.

As the competition for water becomes more intense in many parts of the country, regionalization of water management offer inherent advantages.

As it is, the management of water supplies does not always recognize basinwide needs. No incentives exist for residents of a watershed to cooperate in establishing their water supplies, and many communities are too small to finance proper treatment and monitoring. Although water management regions may be difficult to establish in this country where watersheds ignore political boundaries, nevertheless a purposeful movement toward more regionalized operations under federally established policy seems essential to sound, long-term conservation of our water resources.

For information on how you can obtain the new book, Cleaning Our Environment, write The American Chemical Society News Service, 1155 16th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20036.

Gearing up for the 80's

There's a new buzz phrase making the rounds these days: "re-invent the automobile." As tall an order as that is, I suspect that America's motor vehicle manufacturers could make significant headway in that direction. But we better make sure that any "re-invention" is superior to what we already have.

What we have are vehicles that meet the tough demands of a highly competitive marketplace. Vehicles that are more fuel efficient, less polluting, safer, more comfortable, more versatile, more reliable, more accessible to more people than the products of any other country's manufacturers — any time in world history. We want comfort on the highway and that's what we have.

Yet manufacturers have kept their vehicles affordable by the vast majority of Americans. There are nearly 150 million vehicles on the road clocking more than 1.5 trillion miles a year.

More than 14 million people work in the highway transportation industry; 22 percent of our workforce. In 1978, more than 977,000 people worked in the direct manufacture of vehicles, receiving about $20 billion in wages and salaries and annually. And the total cost of transporting freight and passengers over our vast highway network represents more than 18 percent of our Gross National Product.

Thus manufacturing decisions must reflect sound, logical business concerns — concerns that address the needs of the consumers, stockholders, boards of directors, and million of employees whose livelihoods depend on the responsible operations of their employers.

There's nothing wrong about the concept of reinventing the automobile, but objectives must be tempered with realities — realities of our economic structure, engineering, technology and of the marketplace.

For in the final analysis, the millions of individual consumers who make decisions in that marketplace dictate the course of industry and our free enterprise system. Among the products of competition are the self-starter, automatic transmissions, power steering and brakes, sealed beam headlights, fuel injection systems and countless other improvements and innovations — all responses to the demands of the American consumer.

The industry is in a technological renaissance. The industrywide down-size program demands new designs, new materials and engineering refinements. It took more than a magic wand to improve fuel economy nearly 50 percent in the past five years, to reduce hydrocarbon emissions by 85 percent, carbon monoxide by 82 percent and oxides of nitrogen by some 50 percent.

It's time we started talking about achievements: about what's good about the 15 million cars and trucks and buses this industry builds and markets each year ... about the jobs it provides ... about the billions in taxes motor vehicles pay, about the services to citizens these taxes help deliver ... and about the scientific know-how, the plain hard work it takes to blend 15,000 components into a vehicle that performs exceptionally well.

It's also time we started taking a serious look at excessive government regulations ... what the costs are and what real benefits what speed and at what sacrifice do we want to achieve well-intentioned environmental goals: at the slipping productivity of American industry. At the enormous amounts of money manufacturers are spending to meet questionable, often confusing and conflicting regulations — money better spent in research and development that is essential to motor vehicle innovation.

In spite of diverse views, there can be common purpose. We ought to identify the real problems and establish priorities to work toward solutions that will not be disruptive to our economy nor unnecessarily costly to manufacturer and consumer. Government and industry would benefit from balancing transportation and economic realities with legitimate societal goals. And both government and industry must step up efforts to assure that the consumers are brought into the process.

The issue is far too critical not to have the active participation of the motorists and others who enjoy — and depend on — the benefits of our transportation system.

Be wise...economize!

If you're like most two, using public Americans, you are really transportation more, beginning to "think economy." There's a new and increasing awareness among all that we won't be able to enjoy forever the fruits of the world's highest standard of living, unless we do.

Fortunately, economizing has become not only popular but a proud achievement. Husbands and wives are doing their own home repair and improvement work, cutting outside-help costs and practicing economy in the purchase of quality, lifetime tools with famous names like Crescent, Nicholson and Wiss. Home sewing is on the rise, too.

With gasoline both short and expensive, Americans are driving less by planning their car use — car pooling to school and work, making one "downtown" trip accomplish the results of

Navy information booth opens at Naval Air Station Oceana

A Navy information booth, staffed by professionals to serve shipmates and their families, is a new innovation at Naval Air Station (NAS) Oceana. Designed to improve retention by answering questions about the Navy, this new effort to retain Navy personnel serving at Oceana is located in the Navy Exchange complex.

In an official ceremony, Captain D.J. Michaels, NAS Oceana's Commander Officer, cut the ribbon and opened the booth on June 20.

Captain Harry J. Post, Commander Tactical Wings Atlantic Chief of Staff, was also on hand for the occasion. Said Captain Post, "People are the Navy's most important asset. Keeping good people is one of our biggest problems. Since we're dealing with people, the relationship between them is communications. You have good and bad communications. Our intent is to have good communications. This is what we have in mind by opening the Navy information booth."

The booth will be open from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. each day, Monday through Friday and will be staffed by command career counselors assisted by departmental and division level career counselors. In addition there will be participation from Navy wives Clubs and ombudsmen.

Advice from the Veterans Administration

Q -- Can a female veteran claim her husband as a dependent?

A -- Yes. When drawing compensation, pension or education benefits from the VA, a female veteran may claim her husband as a dependent.

Q -- Last semester I was attending school with GI Bill education assistance. I dropped out of school in the middle of the term, but I received two additional checks. I plan to re-enter training in the near future. Must I repay the additional funds I received or can I just apply them to future education?

A -- The checks you received are considered overpayments. You must repay this money at the earliest possible date. You will not receive additional assistance until you have repaid the overpayments.

Q -- I obtained a release of liability when I let a non-veteran assume my home loan. Am I eligible for restoration of my VA home loan guaranty entitlement?

A -- Release of liability does not restore VA entitlement automatically. Entitlement used to guarantee the loan may be restored only when the loan is paid in full and the veteran has disposed of the property.

Charges against Utilities Dept. bring about city investigation

By LEX CAMILL

Virginia Beach Sun Public Affairs Writer

William T. Reil considers himself an "honest, hard-working fellow who knows his business." Virginia Beach City Councilman Reid Ervin thinks Reil borders on being a genius.

Reil is an electrical engineer employed by the city Utilities Department from Aug. 16, 1977, to March 9, 1979, when he quit to bring his grievances against the department out into the open.

Since then, Reil, married and the father of a baby girl, has been unemployed and has spent approximately $8,000 to explain and document his case. He has charged the Utilities Department with practices which threaten the health and welfare of the citizens and uneconomical operations.

Special report released

Monday afternoon, a special council committee released a lengthy report substantially supporting Reil's contentions but falling short of indicting management decisions in the Utilities Department. Members of the committee were Councilmen Reid Ervin, chairman; Donald Merrick and Clarence A. Holland.

Council accepted the report, but, reportedly, only on condition that an eighth recommendation be accepted that Reil be denied any further forum before the council concerning the matter. The recommendation was added during an executive session of council Monday preceding the formal session.

Reil seeks reimbursement

Accordingly, Reil was not permitted to read a prepared statement during the open council session in which he lists the grievances originally filed in October 1978. He had also attempted unsuccessfully to read the speech to Council on March 19.

In a letter handed to council members along with copies of the speech he didn't get to make, Reil proposed that council recommend the city manager's office take several actions including reimbursing Reil for all expenses incurred by him and his family following the October 1978 grievance and reinstatement as utilities electrical engineer.

Reil, who joined the department at a salary of $18,400 a year, now requests $35,000 "based on the proven fact that, by virtue of my character, abilities, education, training, and experience, I am the most qualified individual for this position."

If the salary needs justification, Reil suggested that he become "City Electrical Engineer," a new position managing all electrical and electronic functions, facilities, materials and manpower under city management.

In addition, Reil seeks the immediate dismissal of personnel listed in his letter of resignation.

Negligence charged

Reil also charges City Manager George L. Hanbury with willful negligence in the execution of his primary job, responsibility of safeguarding the health and welfare of city employees and the citizens of Virginia Beach. Reil charges that Hanbury "knowingly misused his public service position to harass and discredit me, to cover up public information and impede the course of justice solely for the purpose of maintaining his present public and personal position." Reil asks the immediate dismissal of Hanbury.

Reil said Monday evening that legal action is a definite alternative to recoup the money he has spent on his campaign and lost in income.

He said he has received several good job offers in his field.

"It's amazing to me," he said, "that of all the people who have listened to me and have believed me and have agreed with me, only the administration has contended I have been telling lies." It was clear from the beginning, he said, that "it would be me or them," "them" apparently meaning the present city management. "All they wanted to do is get rid of me."

The Utilities department isn't the only city department with problems, he said. "They exist everywhere," he said. "There are a lot of competent people in the city with good ideas but they are suppressed because they threaten (the jobs of) people above them."

Basically, Ervin said, recommendations in the committee report suggest the need for review by the city manager. He said there is always room for criticism, but the report says that "These are things I want to correct."

Report suggests need for review

The committee recognized that Utilities Director Aubrey Watts did not have the background to run a large facility.

Holland added that the city has experienced such phenomenal growth that it was hard for anybody to run the department.

Ervin said, "Maybe we're not as organized as we ought to be, maybe we're not as professional as we ought to be...We knew we were having a lot of problems...The strict application of the OSHA are hard for anybody to get a passing grade."

Merrick agreed with a reporter that if Reil had not presented his grievances, council would not have made a report.

Committee recommendations

Recommendations of the committee include:

- Support of the policy of in-house promotions at all levels and recognition that superior management and organizational skills can, in some cases, overcome the lack of technical knowledge required for positions such as Director of Public Utilities. Future hirings, however, in key management positions should be based on job descriptions established for those positions.

- That the city advertise immediately for an experienced electrical engineer for the Utility Department. This position should be supported by at least two journeymen electricians who can provide knowledgeable around-the-clock service.

- Review of the city's safety program by the city manager and continued training in good safety practices.

- That the inspection, testing and repair of the electrical services in existing pump stations be expedited in accordance with the correspondence attached or in accordance with some other adequate procedure.

Blue Law exemption approved

Sales of merchandise on municipally-owned property in Virginia Beach will be exempted from the State Blue Laws.

By a vote of 6-4 City Council Monday afternoon approved an ordinance allowing the city government to designate those events on municipally-owned property which are exempt from working or transacting business on Sunday.

Councilwoman Meyera Oberndorf tried to defeat the ordinance because the majority of the people of Virginia Beach, she said, voted in favor of retaining the Blue Laws. "I do not feel we can exempt certain people," she said.

She moved denial, seconded by Councilman George R. Ferrell, but a substitute motion to approve the ordinance passed. Voting for the ordinance were Councilmen John A. Baum, J. Curtis Payne Jr., Clarence A. Holland and Vice Mayor Dr. J. Henry McCoy Jr. and Mayor Patrick L. Standing. Voting against approval were Councilmen George R. Ferrell and Donald Merrick and Councilwomen Barbara Henley and Oberndorf. Councilman Red Ervin,

City license fees place burden on independent gasoline retailers

The City of Virginia Beach is studying possible inequities which are placing a "tremendous burden" on independent gasoline retailers.

City Council Monday afternoon instructed City Manager George L. Hanbury to study the city's license fee charges which gasoline retailers claim are forcing them to pay a percentage on increased income they don't actually receive.

City Attorney Dale Bimson was also instructed to look into the possibility of denying conditional use permits for new service stations based on the health, safety and welfare of the people.

William J. Anderson, president of the Tidewater Chapter of the Virginia Gasoline Retailers Association, told council Monday afternoon that the companies are experiencing a drastic increase in license fees charged by the city.

License fees are based on gross sales, which in four years have gone up 300 percent. Anderson explained that the companies, however, are actually earning less money. Federal law restricts companies to the same margin of profit of four years ago. The increase in gross sales reflects the increase in the cost of gasoline charged by the oil companies, Anderson said.

If he sold the same amount of gas he sold four years ago, Anderson said his profit would be the same, but the gross receipts have increased 300 percent. Actually the Beach Oceanfront branch library exhibits Leonardo da Vinci display

The inventive genius and foresight of Leonardo da Vinci, who conceived of the flying machine and other developments that did not take practical form until modern times, is depicted in an exhibition currently on display at the Oceanfront Branch Library, 1811 Arctic Avenue, Virginia Beach.

The exhibition of the 15th Century artist-scientist's work, on loan from the IBM Corporation, includes models built from Leonardo's scientific and technical drawings. It will remain through the month of July.

Models in the show include both practical and theoretical devices. Among them are a paddle-wheel ship, an idea that was not successfully developed until the advent of steam power in the 19th Century; a theoretical gear system that produced three speeds of rotation, as in the modern automobile transmission; and a device for determining the tensile strength of wire, information essential to the engineer five centuries ago, as it is today.

Leonardo was fascinated with the possibility of human flight, and devised many schemes for flying, including ornithopters—whose principle support and propulsion comes from flapping wings. A model of an ornithopter in the show follows an early design calling for a lattice-like wooden framework, two moveable wings, a series of ropes and pulleys and a winglass. This was to be operated by the flyer, lying prone in the framework.

Although Leonardo considered war "a bestial madness," he was one of the leading military engineers of his time, and made innumerable sketches for fortifications and weapons. Models in the show include an armored tank, in which he foresaw a type of vehicle not extensively used until World War I, and a scaling ladder that resembles modern fire fighting apparatus, but which Leonardo designed for storming walls of an enemy fortress.

The first set of models of Leonardo's work constructed in contemporary times was built in 1938 for an exhibition in Milan, Italy. It traveled briefly, and during World War II was completely destroyed by bombs in Tokyo. Another group of models, built in the United States after the war, was acquired by IBM in 1951, and incorporated into the company's touring exhibition program. The models are displayed with panels of explanatory material and sketches reproduced from Leonardo's notebooks.

Five of these exhibitions are now traveling, on loan to museums, colleges and public libraries. Last year IBM's touring exhibitions were seen in more than 60 cities throughout the United States.

"But we are smiling"

Back in the 1870's, a person was required to hold a pose for six seconds in order to have a tintype photo taken. People thought it was too difficult to hold a smile for that long, so it became the custom to wear a sober face or frown. Not knowing that they were also posing for the Virginia Beach Sun, Tara, Carl and Michael Green struck up a pose for a tintype photo while wearing 1870's styled clothes during a recent vacation visit to Silver Dollar City. The Greens live on Dennis Ct., Virginia Beach.

It pays to recycle aluminum

For the second time this year Reynolds Aluminum Recycling Company is increasing the amount it pays the public for recycling aluminum beverage cans and other clean household aluminum. Effective immediately, the company will be paying 23 cents per pound, an increase of three cents per pound, Richard N. Bolling, president of Reynolds Aluminum Recycling Company, announced.

"The energy savings afforded by recycling aluminum has increased the value of the metal," Bolling said. "As the value of aluminum increases, so does the number of people recycling and the number of pounds of aluminum that they keep out of the litter and solid waste stream. This was evidenced by the increased number of recyclers and pounds collected by Reynolds after we raised the price from 17 cents to 20 cents a pound last February."

Locally Reynolds stops at: Recycling Service Center, 1435 Air Rail Ave., Tuesday through Saturday from 9 to 4:30.

Besides all-aluminum beverage cans and other clean household aluminum products such as pie plates, foil, frozen food and dinner trays and dip, pudding and meat containers, Reynolds recycles certain other aluminum items — including siding, gutters, storm door and window frames, lawn furniture tubing and aluminum castings — which are also worth 23 cents per pound if properly prepared.

This aluminum must be free of all foreign materials, cut to lengths not exceeding three feet and should not be mixed with aluminum cans.

Campus Crusade college team works to share faith at Beach

Some college students come to Virginia Beach for summer jobs to offset school expenses, while others come to enjoy the local atmosphere.

The 40 students who make up a Campus Crusade for Christ International team here this summer have both these things in mind, but their main goal is something else entirely: sharing the love of Christ with others.

Some of the students and staff come from as far away as Hawaii and California. Other students are from Virginia and neighboring states.

The purpose of the summer project — and similar projects throughout the United States and in several other countries — is to "share the life-changing love of Jesus Christ, and develop leadership for the Campus Crusade college ministry," according to John Mansfield, director of the local project and a full-time staff member of the organization.

Project participants are drawn from students active at their own colleges and universities with Campus Crusade, an interdenominational organization founded at UCLA in 1951.

Students support themselves for the summer by finding fulltime jobs in the community ranging from waitressing to construction work. Bible studies, small group meetings, lectures and training in how to share their faith occupy the evenings, while special Christian outreach activities with churches or at parks or other recreational centers are planned for the weekends.

In addition to the activities related directly to their own project, the young people are encouraged to become actively involved in churches of their choice, including participation in Sunday School, youth groups, the choir, or other available options.

The students and Campus Crusade staff members taking part in the Virginia Beach project represent only a few of those involved in the total project program worldwide, explained Mansfield, whose regular assignment is at the University of Buffalo in New York.

There are 30 projects in the U.S. itself this summer, including ones at Daytona Beach, Fla., Honolulu, Hawaii, the Chicago inner city, Yellowstone National Park, and Colorado State University. In addition, there are seven international projects, in England, France, Kenya, West Germany, the Fiji Islands, Guam, and the Philippines.

Slide down the radiance of the rainbow to the gently rolling hills and the waving grasses of the meadow, blown by the wind like ripples on a pond. Tread lightly where the multi-hued flowers show their sunny faces like shy peeking children.

Follow the warmth of the fiery sun to the place where it sinks into the sparkling green sea, its tiniest rays dancing like nymphs on the waves. Patriotism is alive in hearts of Junior American Citizens Patriotism — is it a thing of the past? If the children at Montessori Children's House are an example, it is flourishing and a definite good prospect for the future of the United States of America. The children at the school are all members of the Junior American Citizens, an organization sponsored by the Princess Anne County Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution.

The highest award given in Junior American Citizens is the Thatcher Award. It is given to those who have demonstrated distinctive qualities of dependability and leadership; for promotion of justice, Americanism and character and for outstanding dedication in activities. The following children were presented this award by Mrs. Clarence Smith, Regent of Princess Anne County Chapter, D.A.R.:

Neil Christensen, David Cohn, Billy Haskins, Katie Jarrott, Gardner Hutchins, Erin Kelley, David Uhrin, Scotty Dratwick, Jenny Iman, Kipton Lankford, Andrew Para, Kathleen Smith, Eric Christensen, and Duncan Wright.

Take precaution to avoid Rocky Mountain Spotted Fever

Rocky Mountain Spotted Fever is a serious illness that harms both people and animals. In 1978 a total of 1,011 cases of Rocky Mountain Spotted Fever were reported to the Center for Disease Control. This year in the state of Virginia a total of 16 cases have been reported.

Rocky Mountain Spotted Fever is transmitted by a tick. However, only two kinds of ticks are known to carry the disease in Virginia. Only about two percent of these become infected. Because it is difficult for untrained persons to identify them, it is better to treat all ticks with suspicion.

Exposure to an infected tick can cause headaches, chills, fever and severe muscle aches. A rash will then appear on the ankles, wrists, palms and soles on or about the second or third day the fever has begun. If these symptoms occur, contact your physician immediately. Early detection will help in treating and curing the illness.

To reduce the chances of developing Rocky Mountain Spotted Fever, the Virginia Beach Health Department advises that you:

1. Avoid tick infested areas — woods and overgrown areas.
2. Tuck pants legs into socks and button shirt sleeves at the wrist. This limits the exposure of the skin to the ticks.
3. If in tick infested areas inspect clothing and bodies every six hours and remove ticks without crushing.

4. Protect hands when removing ticks from animals — Use gloves, tweezers or tissues.

5. Tick repellents of value are diethyltoluamide and dimethylphthalate.

6. Steady traction should be used to insure removal of the mouth parts.

Following these helpful hints you will lessen the chance of contacting Rocky Mountain Spotted Fever.

Auxiliary gives gifts to veterans

Smiles and laughs were brought to the veterans in the Hampton VA Hospital recently when the Ladies Auxiliary of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, Post 392 presented 1,117 "Frustration Pencils" and 11 lap robes to the patients.

Members of the auxiliary participating in the presentation were Shirley Humphrey, president; Mary Knapper, senior vice president elect; and Mary Barraco, junior vice president elect. Also present were James Tanner, Director of Volunteer Services for the VA Hospital and Mrs. Doris Wall, Hampton VAVS representative for the auxiliary.

Summer, when all the air conditioners are humming, is the time when our customers use more power than at any other time of year. To meet the demand this summer, you can be sure that we'll be doing everything we can to provide you with all the power you need. We'll be using our available units to capacity, and if necessary, we'll be buying power from our neighboring utilities.

If you pitch in by following the steps below, you can help us make it through the summer.

1. Don't overcool your home. Set your home air conditioner's thermostat at 78° or higher, or not more than 15° cooler than the temperature outside, whichever is the higher setting.

For every degree cooler than 78°, your air conditioner uses about 5% more energy. So a 73° setting means you're using 25% more energy than you would at a 78° setting.

By watching your thermostat, you'll save energy at a time when it's most important.

And you'll save money, too.

2. Do the big jobs early. Or late. We call it Hot Watch. The hours between 10 A.M. and 10 P.M. are the "peak load" hours, when the most electricity is being used and the chance of shortages is greatest.

So try to restrict your use of major appliances and hot water during these hours.

Do your baking and laundry before 10 A.M. Turn on the dishwasher just before you go to bed. Shower before 10 A.M. or after 10 P.M.

You won't be using less energy, but you'll be using it when we have power to spare. And that will reduce our need to build costly power plants.

3. Give your water heater a rest. It will save money and energy. With the exception of heating and cooling systems, the water heater is the biggest energy user in your home.

Use your dishwasher and washing machine only for full loads. Wash clothes in cool or warm water instead of hot.

With your help we can save energy and make it through the summer. And that's important to all of us.

Contemporary crafts on exhibit at Beach Arts Center

"Spirit, Form, and Function," an exhibition of contemporary crafts sponsored by the Virginia Crafts Council, is open to the public at the Virginia Beach Arts Center.

The Crafts Council was organized in 1967 to expand public awareness of the beauty and spirit of handcrafted objects. A wide variety of skills is included, from an inlaid wooden game to quiltmaking. The materials used are equally varied, ranging from opalescent antique glass to polished ebony to recording tape.

This is the final showing of the exhibition, which has also been seen in the Greater Reston Art Center and the Roanoke Art Center. It closes on August 15.

In the small gallery space will be works on paper by Francis O'Connor. Awarded a scholarship at the Skowhegan School of Painting and Sculpture, he received his BFA in sculpture from the Portland School of Fine Art in 1978.

A reception will be held for these exhibitions on Saturday, July 14, at 8 p.m. at the Arts Center, 1711 Arctic Avenue. The gallery is open from 11 to 4, Monday through Saturday.

Virginia Orchestra Group sets budget at $781,000

The Board of Directors of the Virginia Orchestra Group approved an operating budget of $781,000 for their 1979-80 season last week advancing the VOG to the ranks of America's regional orchestras. Income derived from grants from the cities of Norfolk, Virginia Beach, Newport News, Hampton, Williamsburg, York and James City Counties, the Virginia Commission of the Arts, the National Endowment of the Arts, private foundations, corporate sponsorships, league projects, marathon, annual fund and individual contributions total $396,157.

The newly formed Virginia Orchestra Group is the consolidation of the Norfolk Symphony, Virginia Beach Pops Symphony and the Peninsula Symphony Orchestra. Under the confederation plan the Norfolk Symphony will become the Virginia Philharmonic, the Virginia Beach Pops will become the Virginia Sunday Pops, and the Peninsula Symphony Orchestra will become the Virginia Classical Orchestra. In addition to these orchestras, the VOG will create a new orchestra, the Virginia Pops, comprising professional musicians and specializing in symphonic pops repertoire.

The Virginia Orchestra Group will perform a total of seventy concerts during the season. Thirty-three subscription concerts are scheduled for the Virginia Philharmonic, Virginia Pops, Virginia Sunday Pops and the Virginia Classical Orchestra. These orchestras will perform approximately thirty-five run-out concerts in the area, including special performances for the Christian Broadcasting Network, Garden Clubs of America, and at the Omni's New Years Eve Pops.

The orchestras will travel to Portsmouth, Franklin, Suffolk, Wakefield, Chesapeake, Currituck Co., N.C., Emporia, Gloucester, Williamsburg, Parsky and the Eastern Shore. Six children's concerts have been scheduled for area youth in Chrysler Hall, Norfolk Academy and the T.A. Willett Auditorium.

In addition to the aforementioned performances, ensembles of the Virginia Orchestra Group will perform with the Old Dominion University Ballet for the "Nutcracker" in December and again for their spring performance in April.

Boys Club of Virginia Beach sponsors Jokari Paddle Ball Tournament

The Boys Club of Virginia Beach is bringing Jokari to town.

Jokari is a new indoor/outdoor game much like racketball that will be featured in a local tournament beginning July 23 and continuing through July 26.

In Jokari, two players compete by using paddles and trying to hit a ball attached to a super-stretch band connected to a weighted base. The band automatically returns the ball for the players to hit again and again, until one player cannot return the ball in one bounce.

Registration for the 1979 Jokari Paddle Ball Tournament, which is one of the 1,000 sanctioned Jokari Tournaments throughout the entire country this year, starts July 11, and is open to everyone from age 8 on up. Participation is free.

Those wanting to pit their skills against others from all over the area may register by calling 499-2311 (ext. 206), or by going to the Boys Club located next to Mt. Trashmore in the United Way Building.

All entrants must register by July 20 to play in the tournament.

Although no formal court is needed to play Jokari, the Boys Club is providing practice sites at Mt. Trashmore.

There will be no charge to use the practice sites, which will be open from 10 a.m. to noon July 16 through July 20. And since Jokari is a new sport, coaches will be at each practice site to give free pointers to budding paddle ball players.

During the tournament, boys will compete against boys, and girls will compete against girls. The players will also be divided into five categories by age: 8-10, 11-12, 13-14, 15-18, and adults over 18.

Everyone who competes in the tournament will receive a special participation patch, and each divisional winner will receive a specially designed trophy.

For more information about how to swing into the Jokari Paddle Ball Tournament action, call Thom Rubin at 499-2311 (ext. 206).

Salt II ultimatum given

Many hope the United States Senate is prepared to demonstrate that it does not take marching orders from the Kremlin. In signaling both its independence and its common sense, the Senate will want to amend the SALT II treaty before considering whether the agreement should be ratified or rejected.

It was to be expected that the Soviets, having negotiated a strategic arms treaty that concedes them considerable advantages, would favor its approval by the Senate without alteration. It was likewise to be expected that the Soviets would publicly express their support for the treaty's existing terms even as the Senate prepared to consider whether those terms were, in fact, in the best interests of the United States.

What no one in Washington was quite prepared for was an explicit Soviet ultimatum. Ratify the treaty as is or the entire arms negotiation process will be cancelled. That is exactly what Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko said in a recent Moscow news conference.

Clearly, the Senate should not be deterred by threats from Moscow. If the Soviets insist on ending the decade-long arms negotiation process because of amendments that would render SALT II fair to both sides, so be it. Such an action would unmistakably reveal the Soviet Union's real objectives and alert the American people to the challenge they face.

Conversely, should the Soviets subsequently decide to swallow their objections and accept a truly equitable and verifiable agreement, American security will have been enhanced and the necessary preconditions for negotiating a balanced SALT III treaty will have been established.

Eighteen years ago, John F. Kennedy warned that the United States should "never negotiate out of fear." The Senate would do well to remember that admonition as it ponders the changes that will be necessary if SALT II is to contribute to preserving the peace and safeguarding American security.

Oil costs 25¢ a barrel

Because of a world oil shortage of two million barrels a day, competitive bidding already has effectively raised the price of oil from the official OPEC rate of $14.54 to $17.50, and some spot bids have gone as high as $40. All the 13 OPEC ministers have done in agreeing on a new barrel price of $18 and surcharges up to $23.50 is to confirm the going world market price. Their differences were only on matters of how much higher to peg the official rate.

Arab motorists meanwhile pay only 15 cents a gallon.

The worst of it is that no one believes this latest price increase will last.

The unprecedented accumulation of wealth by the OPEC nations, particularly the thinly populated Arab members, at the expense of the rest of the world gives them an economic advantage that is mind boggling.

The best and perhaps the only way out of this energy bondage for the United States is through the earliest possible development of synthetic fuels, in the same all-out way synthetic rubber was developed during the early months of World War II when natural rubber sources were cut off.

A people who organized their brains and resources to harness nuclear energy in the Manhattan Project, who created a whole new synthetic rubber industry almost overnight, and who put men on the moon can solve their energy problem if aroused to do so.

Letters

Consumer victory due to effort of concerned citizens, says Canada

Editor, Virginia Beach Sun:

I want to thank the people of Virginia Beach for their letters and concern over Vepco's recent rate increase request. The result was a victory for consumers in Virginia Beach and other parts of the state.

Your letters and calls helped prepare me to address the State Corporation Commission. I felt very strongly than any mismanagement or faulty design should not be passed on to consumers.

The result of our joint effort was that the SCC finally showed a willingness to favor the arguments of the public and its representatives instead of continually siding with Vepco and the major utilities. The Commission decided last week to cut Vepco's requested increase several million dollars.

I was honored and gratified to have been a spokesman for consumers in the hearings that led to that rate decision. Less than two weeks before the ruling I had asked the SCC to investigate allegations that Vepco's negligence had resulted in $4 or $5 million waste.

The eventual decision confirmed that Vepco was to blame for a nine-day shutdown in 1977 of Unit 2 at Vepco's nuclear plant at Surry, resulting in $3.8 million additional cost for electricity. The wasteful cost was brought on by the necessity of using more expensive fuel to generate electricity, and the consumers originally had to pay for Vepco's $3.8 million error.

I asked the SCC 2 weeks ago to keep the consumers from paying for the mistakes of others, and last week they did just that.

Since the closure in 1977 was Vepco's fault, the SCC scratched the $3.8 million which had been overcharged to consumers from $13.1 million which the commission said Vepco was entitled to collect to recover fuel costs.

Vepco's chairman T. Justin Moore was quoted last week as being terribly disappointed at the ruling, but I felt it was high time the consumers had a ruling they could applaud.

In other developments last week, I talked with Gov. John Dalton and his representative from the Energy Office in Richmond about the gasoline allocations in our area.

We reviewed the allocations, and the governor assured me that with his new power of shifting certain gasoline supplies, he will try to keep gasoline flowing in Virginia Beach in an effort to keep the tourist industry at a maximum.

Gov. Dalton reconfirmed to me his support and appreciation for Virginia Beach's tourist industry, and said he will certainly keep this in mind in changing any allocations.

The Governor had received the power last week from President Carter to shift up to 5 percent of Virginia's gasoline from rural to urban areas. Gov. Dalton said he is concerned about all Virginians, and he doesn't want to hurt the gasoline supply in rural areas, but he promised me he will do everything possible for the tourist industry.

I would like to continue receiving letters and calls from concerned citizens in Virginia Beach and service station dealers. Your help in keeping me informed on current situations will help me in discussing the matter with the governor and his representatives.

You may write to me at: 2420 Virginia Beach Boulevard, Virginia Beach, Virginia 23454.

Editor, Virginia Beach Sun:

Last art show! That's what it was for me. The parking situation was miserable and costly. I spotted a lot on 8th Street and eased my car into a remaining parking space.

When I returned my car was gone. I called the police and I was told that the car had been towed to Rick's Garage at 17th Street and Monroe.

I was willing and ready to pay for my mistake. When I arrived at Rick's, I thought I was in Times Square. Wow! What a going business he has. It is well organized. One man collects money, another man writes out your receipt and then another man checks for the receipt as you drive through the gate. The policeman on duty also is most helpful in keeping things orderly.

It's really a great show, almost worth the money. How much? Fifty dollars. No checks or credit cards. Cash only, please. Come on city fathers!

SOCIAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATION

Your number's up

By Harvey J. Ridinger, Field Representative

Who can get benefits

Did you know that under certain circumstances a child may qualify for a social security check based on a grandparent's work under social security?

Or, that a divorced woman whose ex-husband has died may qualify for a social security check based on his record? Or, that a dependent parent may qualify for social security based on a deceased son's or daughter's work under social security?

If you didn't know about the social security benefits then you are probably one of those people who think of social security simply as a program that pays retirement benefits to older people. You are probably unaware of the benefits payable to disabled workers and the dependents of retired, deceased, or disabled workers.

The fact is, more than a third of the 35 million people currently receiving social security benefits are the dependents of retired, deceased, or disabled workers. Benefits for dependents have been payable since social security benefits were first paid in 1940. They are designed to help prevent poverty and economic dependency within the society by enabling a worker to provide for the day when he or she can no longer support those depending on his or her earnings.

What you don't know about social security can hurt you. An application for benefits is necessary before they can be paid. People who are unaware of what social security benefits are payable risk the loss of benefits.

At the very least they lose the opportunity to use the information in their family financial planning.

Just for the record and for your future financial planning, here is a list of cash benefits that are currently payable based on your work under social security:

- Benefits to wife or husband 62 or over.
- Benefits to wife under 62 who's caring for worker's child under 18 (or disabled) who's getting a benefit based on the retired or disabled worker's earnings.

- Widow or widower 60 or older.
- Widow, widower, or surviving divorced mother if caring for worker's child under 18 (or disabled) who is getting a benefit based on the earnings of the deceased worker.
- Widow or widower 50 or older who becomes disabled within 7 years after worker's death or within 7 years after he or she stops getting checks as a widow or widower caring for the workers' children.
- Divorced wife or husband at 62, or surviving divorced wife at 60, or disabled surviving divorced wife 50 or older if the marriage has lasted 10 years or more.
- Children including natural, adopted, and step children.
- Children living with their grandparents, under certain conditions, on their grandparent's work record.
- Dependent parent on a deceased son's or daughter's record.

Generally a marriage must have lasted at least a year before dependents of a retired or disabled person may draw monthly benefits. Survivors can get benefits in most cases if the marriage lasted at least 9 months.

The benefits for children may amount to 50 percent of the worker's basic benefit if the worker is retired or disabled, and 75 percent if the worker is deceased. For spouses the benefit may amount to 50 percent if the worker is retired or disabled, and up to 100 percent if the worker is deceased.

There is a family maximum which may amount to as much as 188 percent of the worker's benefit.

If you need more information on any specific type of benefit call the social security office for a leaflet or pamphlet. For a general explanation of social security provisions, the leaflet, "Your Social Security" is very helpful. Virginia Beach residents can call 441-3401 for this leaflet or visit the Norfolk Social Security Office at 200 Granby Mall - Room 600.

TIDEWATER COMMUNITY COLLEGE-VA. BEACH

Today College Counts

By D. William Bridges
Director of Continuing Education

The TCC Writing Center

Students at the Virginia Beach campus of Tidewater Community College, who have trouble completing writing assignments now have assurance of getting the help they need. Established by the English department last year, the Writing Center can provide assistance to any student with any writing problem, whether the problem is the result of an assignment from an English class or any other course.

The goal of the Writing Center is to help students express their thoughts clearly. Sometimes this can mean clarifying an idea in one's own mind before beginning an assignment, organizing ideas logically, or learning to write clear, complete sentences. A poll of students would probably reveal that most have problems with at least one aspect of writing assignments.

The Writing Center, located in the Learning Resources Center, is staffed by "volunteers" from the English department faculty. Faculty members donate time during their office hours to be on hand in the Writing Center to help whatever students come in. The hours the center is open may vary from day to day and from quarter to quarter.

Students do not need to make an appointment to use the resources of the Writing Center and are encouraged to drop in as the need for help arises. It is preferred that students seeking help with problems relating to specific English assignments have the instructor's approval before contacting the center.

To date the Writing Center has met with excellent response. Students are taking advantage of the resources of the center to the extent that the English Department hopes to increase the number of hours the center will be open in the fall quarter. Students say the advantage of knowing where to find help for a specific problem plus gaining a new perspective by discussing a problem with a teacher other than the one who made the assignment originally are two factors which have attracted them to the center.

Not only students can benefit from the center, however. Faculty members are encouraged to use the center's facilities to incorporate writing assignments into their courses or to improve the quality of the writing assignments they make.

The beauty of the Writing Center's success is twofold. Not only are students improving their writing skills, but that goal is being attained at no cost to either students or the college. Students receive what is essentially tutoring without paying tutor fees, and the college provides the center with no financial outlay by using existing resources of faculty volunteers and available space.

Today college counts!

Two residents of Virginia Beach were recently honored for outstanding service to the profession of selling by Bluefield Fashion Exhibitors Inc., which holds three apparel markets annually at Bluefield, W.Va.

Receiving the NAWCAS Guild's distinguished service medals were Milton Soffer and Everett Stone, both of Virginia Beach. Soffer served two years as president of Bluefield Fashion Exhibitors and Stone has been on its board of governors several terms.

More basic maintenance: flooring needs attention

By LIN J. COOPER

Director of Communications, Tidewater Builders Association

Keeping the flooring in your home in good condition...it's another one of the items that not only benefits you while you live in your home but also adds to its resale value because of the fine visual image well cared-for flooring creates.

In my continuing glossary of maintenance tips and suggestions, the following information is offered on maintaining different types of flooring.

Concrete Floors. Usually concrete floors are maintenance free, but they are susceptible to cracking under unusual conditions, as this column explained last week.

A concrete sealer will make an unpainted concrete floor easier to keep clean. Follow the manufacturer's directions for cleaning after the sealer has been applied. Unpainted concrete floors should be cleaned with soap. Instead, use a solution of four to six tablespoons of washing soda to a gallon of hot water. Wet the floor with clear water first. If necessary, scouring powder may be used in conjunction with the washing soda solution. A stiff brush will help to loosen dirt. Rinse with clear water. Painted concrete floors can be cleaned with plain water or a mild soap or detergent solution.

Hardwood Floors. The structural lumber in your house has been selected in sizes and grades to provide a safety factor well beyond what is required to carry the load. Some shrinkage may occur in these framing members, but your home has been designed so that any settling will be as nearly even as possible.

Like other building materials, wood may contract or expand with weather changes. It is not affected by heat or cold, but it may shrink under extreme dryness or swell under extreme humidity.

The hardwood floors in your new home have been precision manufactured and expertly installed and finished by skilled craftsmen.

Normal maintenance calls for regular vacuuming or dry mopping to remove surface dust and dirt and for periodic waxing. The frequency of cleaning and waxing depends on the amount of traffic your floors receive. Always use a "spirit" wax, either liquid or paste. The wax can be buffed most easily with an electric polisher than can usually be rented at a neighborhood hardware store or supermarket. If you use a "self-polishing" liquid wax, be sure it is made for use on wood floors.

If the floors become excessively soiled, they can be cleaned with mineral spirits, naphtha, or commercial cleaners which leave a protective coat of wax as they clean. Do not use water to clean hardwood floors; it sometimes causes the grain to rise, and prolonged use may cause cracks resulting from expansion and shrinkage of the wood.

On moderately soiled floors where traffic is not excessive, cleaning and polishing can be done in one operation with clean-and-wax products. To use, remove black marks with dry steel wool, sweep to remove loose dirt, then apply the clean-and-wax product according to manufacturer's directions; rinse the applicator in water to remove the soil.

When applying polish, keep away from baseboards; little traffic occurs there. This will minimize build-up and extend periods between removal.

Protect the finish on your floors by attaching furniture rests to the bottom of furniture legs. This will also help distribute the weight.

Resilient Floors. Resilient floors include such types as linoleum, asphalt, vinyl, vinyl-asbestos, and rubber. Daily care with a broom, dust mop or vacuum should be supplemented by damp mopping occasionally. However, when floors are dull or cannot be refurbished by mopping, given them a thorough cleaning using a good detergent diluted as recommended by the manufacturer. Rinse the floor and let it dry.

The best polish for those resilient floors that need waxing is a water emulsion wax. Apply moderate coats; the right amount is the least that can be applied without streaking. Let it dry about 30 minutes before exposure to traffic. Some porous floors may require two coats, with a buffing after each. Once or twice a year take off the build-up of old polish or wax with a remover. Dilute it as recommended, apply, rinse, let dry, and apply a new coat of polish.

Tile Floors. Ceramic tile normally needs only a wipe with a damp cloth or an occasional wet mopping to stay clean and new-looking. To remove particularly heavy accumulations of film from glazed tile, you may need to use a stiff brush and a mild scouring powder; unglazed tile may be scrubbed or scraped. To clean the joints between tiles, use a fiber brush and a mild cleanser. A special sealer for grout will make it more stain resistant.

Cork Floors. Use a spirit wax or wax cleaner on cork tile. Minor stains can be sanded out with a fine grade sandpaper. Rewax after sanding the stain.

State Floors. Use a spirit wax or wax cleaner on state floors with a mild detergent solution.

He said that the retailers are paying license fees on profits and charges of the gasoline companies.

The availability of gas in Virginia Beach, he said, will also suffer because of the rollover of new gasoline stations which can command big allocations. However, since the stations are often located in sections of the city which are not fully developed and where the demand isn't as great, See LICENSE FEES, page 11

Beach farming and gardening

Compiled by Diane Reif
Extension Specialist

Four or five layers of newspaper will serve as an effective mulch in the garden. Cover with sawdust or soil to reduce the white glare and prevent them from blowing away.

Remove the old flower heads of rhododendron, laurel, and andromeda. This will prevent fruit and seed formation, allowing all of the plant food materials to be available for vigorous growth, and flower bud formation of next year's blooms.

Remove early season growth from privet and evergreen shrubs like hemlock and yew. This will maintain their attractive form as a landscape plant.

Check your lawn mower height. To promote the best growth of grass, mow your lawn at a height of at least 1 1/2 inches.

Thin out the flower and vegetable plants in your garden. You will get a larger size and better quality harvest from plants which are properly spaced.

Plant annual flowers in tubs, or large crocks for the porch or terrace. Be sure there are holes in the bottom and a layer of crushed stones to provide good drainage.

Save lawn clippings for use as mulch on flowers and vegetables.

Plants wilt more often from a lack of oxygen than a lack of water. When the soil is compacted, the plant's tender feeder roots and root hairs suffocate. The problem is compounded when the well-meaning gardener assumes this is a sign of water stress and immediately irrigates. Well-aerated soil, enriched with organic matter, allows both air and water to circulate freely about the root system for a vigorous plant.

Apply water each week to newly planted shrubs during dry periods.

Summer planting of shrubs is practical if you use container grown plants.

Harvest your vegetables at the peak of maturity. One of the most important advantages of the home garden is the opportunity to have high-quality vegetables. Don't allow them to become too old before you pick them.

Harvest summer squash when about 6 inches long. Never allow them to become more than 8 inches long. Pick sweet corn just before it is to be used. If it is held under warm conditions, the sugar changes to starch and the corn is much poorer in quality.

Wash vegetables immediately after harvest to remove dirt and spray residue. Store in a refrigerator until ready to use.

Plant Chinese cabbage in July about 90 days before the average date of the first fall frost in your locality. This will allow crisp, firm heads to form in the cool days of early autumn.

The roots of vine crops like cucumbers, melons, and squash usually extend as far as the vines, and sometimes farther. Melons that grow to a length of 12 or 15 feet will have roots of the same length or longer when growing in a good garden soil.

When delphiniums and snapdragons finish blooming, cut the stalks down to about 4 inches tall. Apply 5-10-5 fertilizer and water thoroughly. This should promote renewed growth and a second blooming period during late summer.

Cut faded flowers of floribunda roses to promote continuous blooming. There are excellent varieties available of this dependable, easily-grown rose.

Dry flowers now for use in arrangements next winter. Early season blooms are better for this purpose than those that develop in late summer. Flowers for drying should be cut during midday, in the late bud or early bloom stage.

Divide and transplant bearded iris using the vigorous ends of the rhizomes. Discard the old center portion. Cut the leaves back to about 8 inches long.

Prune clipped hedges again to maintain that well-groomed appearance.

Summer garden activities include cultivating, hoeing and mulching

Summer is a wonderful time in the garden. Lettuce, green onions, and radishes are ready to harvest. Young beets for greens will soon be available, as well as mustard, collards, and Swiss chard. Your spring planting efforts are starting to pay dividends, points out the Virginia Beach Department of Agriculture Cooperative Extension Service.

At the season, the garden provides a different type of recreational activity. Weeds must be controlled by cultivating, hoeing, or mulching. Mulching is the best because it will also conserve soil moisture.

Thin out your vegetables to allow space for each plant to attain full size. Highest yields will be secured from reasonably close spacing, but crowded plants will be spindly, and the crop you harvest will be small and low in quality.

Also, be sure to thin out your annual flowers. This is particularly necessary if you expect to produce exhibition size specimens for a show. Tall slender types should be spaced about one-fourth as far apart as their mature height. Bushy species should be about two-thirds as far apart as their ultimate height. Low edging and ground cover plants may be spaced as far apart as their expected height.

To secure a bushy type of growth, pinch out the top of young annual flowering plants. Remove about one inch of the top, just about a set of leaves, when the plant is about four inches tall. This will cause shoots to develop from the base, and give a nice well-branched form.

The disbudding of your flowers will help to secure large, beautiful blooms, on straight, strong stems. This is an easy job. All you need to do is remove the small side buds along the stem, which form in the angles of the leaves. This allows all of the reserve foods to be used for one large flower rather than many smaller ones.

Tall flowers should be staked to prevent damage by wind. Use stakes which are large enough to support the plant but are not too conspicuous. Use soft twine or the easy-twist tape and wire ties.

The standard, indeterminate type tomato varieties may be trained on a stake or supported by a wire cage. This will save space in the garden, and give a tall plant which will produce fine fruits which are easy to harvest. To stake, tie the main stem with binder twine or strong cord about every eight inches. Remove the side shoots which develop in the angles of the leaves.

The new bush type tomato varieties produce compact plants which require no staking. These should be mulched to improve growth and prevent tomatoes from resting on bare soil because some branches grow horizontal near the ground.

Pick old, wilted flowers as they die to cause continued blooming throughout the summer. Most annual flowers will bloom until killed by frost if given proper care. They do not have a single short flowering period as is true for most perennial plants.

Irrigate your flower and vegetable garden during periods of dry weather. Do the same for your roses and shrubs. Plants need 1 inch of rain per week during the summer.

Potatoes: backbone of world's vegetable diet

The potato is probably one of the world's most important vegetables. Many international diets are dependent on the potato as a basis. And, it is one of the few vegetables that originated in the Western hemisphere, probably in the Andean region of South America. At least, the species found there many years ago is more closely akin to the varieties known today.

The word "potato" apparently came from the Spanish, "patato" or "batata" which should have been applied to the sweet potato was mistakenly applied to the white potato.

Many have been misinformed about the white or Irish potato. First, the Irish potato is not native to Ireland and was not introduced to the Irish until 1585. Historically, the Irish made the white potato well-known because of the Great Potato Famine.

Second, white or Irish potatoes, contrary to popular belief, are not an exceptionally fattening food. As a matter of fact, one medium-size potato contains no more calories than a large apple or a single baking powder biscuit of average size. And, the potato is a fair source of vitamins and minerals. With vitamins B-1, C and G and, in addition, an abundant content of iron, phosphorus and other minerals, it is obvious that the potato deserves its position as the backbone of the world's vegetable diet.

Third, few Virginians realize that Virginia is an important producer of Irish potatoes. Virginia's Eastern Shore is the scene of activity each summer as the first potato deal of the year is completed. The harvesting season is from about June 20 to July 20 with many of the best of Virginia's shore reaching retail counters during the summer and early fall.

Virginia's potato crop prospects appear bright, although some plants have been damaged by heavy rainfall. So, look for Virginia round white potatoes, fondly called Irish potatoes. A more versatile, delicious, all-purpose potato would be hard to find.

Beach, blind & boat:

White Marlin off Va. Capes-- Fresh Water yielding plenty of Bass and Bream

By ED LEWIS
Virginia Beach Sun Outdoors Writer

The bottom fishing in the Chesapeake Bay is still slower than usual for this time of year but fresh water and offshore fishing is picking up the slack. Flounder are still biting all along the Eastern Shore's seaside channels, according to Jim Lewis at the Wachapreague Marina. Charter boats out of Wachapreague are returning to port with over 100 per boat and some are picking up a few spots.

Emmet Bailey of Bailey's Bait and Tackle at Cape Charles told me that the fishing in the lower bay is still poor, with only a few cobia being caught. However, he did say that when Virginia State Game Warden Mike Cason and a friend, Hank Jones went marlin fishing (aboard capt. Kemper Goffigon's boat) Mike caught a 55 pound white marlin and Hank landed a 45 pounder.

On the western shore of the bay, the fishing piers are having a very slow season. Flounder seem to be their major catch, besides the large number of crabs that are being brought in. They are catching a few spot, croaker and trout but not in any great quantity. In the area of the fourth island, drift fishermen are still catching their share of flounder — plus a few croaker. I've also had a few good reports of spot, croaker and flounder being taken by drift fishermen in the area of the Thimble Shoal light.

Henry at D&M Marina told me that their off shore boats are catching plenty of bluefin tuna. On Monday he said a 94 lb. citation bluefin was taken by an unidentified angler fishing with Capt. Keven Felden on the charter boat "Our Dream". Henry also told me he weighed in a 65 lb. white marlin, but that he did not have the angler nor the captain's name.

At the Virginia Beach Sports Fishing Center, Ann Simpson told me that their off-shore boats are doing equally as well. While I was talking with her, the charter boat "Rhonda" returned with sixteen large bluefin tuna. In addition, the charter boat "Mike II" had eight bluefins — one which weighed 57 lbs.

Down at Nags Head the fishing is still a little slow in the surf. Mike at Tatum's Bait and Tackle Shop told me that the water is just too clear. He said the drift fishermen at Oregon Inlet seem to be having the best luck with fairly large catches of flounder and trout. I advised Mike that I was coming down Friday to do some fishing, and he told me that my best bet would be 1) to fish the inlet on the north side and 2) after dark to rig for channel bass. So if you are going down this weekend you might want to keep this in mind.

On the freshwater scene the action is even better than last week. Otis at the Northwest River Camp Grounds told me that bass fishermen have been having good luck all week. He said R. Huff and C. Yeagler of Fredrick, Md. spent four days at the campgrounds and caught bass each day (Thursday they loaded their creel with thirteen). Cecil Calpepper had a good day Sunday when he caught twenty bream at the campgrounds. Mr. Ward of Chesapeake did equally as well on Monday with a catch of twenty. Otis said the week's big fisherman, however, was Jr. Gray. He caught over 100 bream on Monday, using crickets for bait. The "River Rat" Rowland Marshall also did pretty good Monday with eight speckled perch and twenty bream.

Robbie of Robbie's Bait and Tackle Shop went with a group of fishermen for an all-night fishing venture to Back Bay on Friday. The party consisted of Don Redford, Robbie, Jack Luttrell, Bill Coward and Bill and Chris Spivey. They fished in the area of the game warden headquarters at Pocahontas, and had it not been for Don Redford they would have gone hungry Friday night. Don was the only one to have any luck Friday, and he saved the day with his limit of eight bass. After eating some of Don's fish, the rest caught on and did their share. Bill and Chris caught over 300 perch and five small catfish. The catfish had a yellow tint to them, and Bill is sure that they were not channel cats. The best I can figure is that they were yellow bullhead cats, though I'm not certain either. If anyone can help us out please write or call in. Saturday morning was a better day for Robbie. He caught his limit of eight bass.

There is no doubt in my mind who the fishermen of the week are. These two anglers had a real nice catch a couple of weeks ago and I thought they must really be lucky. But after seeing what they did on July 4th, I guess I can't call it luck anymore. Cecil Castellow and Michael Burns caught eleven bass for a total weight of 63 pounds. Cecil's fish weighed-in at 6 lb. 12 oz.; 6 lb. 8 oz.; 6 lb. 4 oz.; 5 lb. 10 oz.; 5 lb. 5 oz.; 5 lb. 4 oz.; and 2 lb. Michael's fish weighed-in at 8 lb. 4 oz. (citation), 7 lb., 6 lb. 12 oz. and 4 lb. Mike and Cecil were fishing at Creeds (Back Bay) and made this fine catch on Johnson spoons. They told me they liked to wade out to chest-deep water to fish instead of using a boat or fishing from the bank.

Crabs are probably one of the best tasting seafoods you can find, so I think it only fair that I give them some space this week. Crabbing is a nice way for a family to spend a day together, without spending a lot of money. You don't need to buy expensive rods and reels — or a boat. If you plan to crab from a beach or low dock, all you will need is a dip net and several lines — depending on how many you want to put out. It's no problem to keep track of eight to ten lines. The dip net is very inexpensive, and I prefer to cut the net out and replace it with a wire mesh (chicken wire). This will eliminate time consuming tangles that occur with the net. The best bait for crabs is raw chicken parts or fish heads.

If you don't know of any place to crab, try one of the area fishing piers. I've been receiving reports that there are so many crabs that the fishermen can hardly keep their bait on long enough to fish. If you decide to crab from a pier you will not need the net, but you will need to purchase a folding crab trap. The bait is tied in the center of the trap, and when it is on the bottom it lays out flat. When you pull it in, the sides fold up and prevent the crab from escaping, while it is being hauled on to the pier. I've seen many people catch a large trash can full of crabs in just a few hours.

If you fish or crab from the shore please be careful. Inexperienced crabbers often wade out too far and slip into deep water. If you can't swim, stay in close and don't crab alone.

If you're planning to do some fishing this week here is a tide table for July 13 through 19. The table is computed for high tide at Sewells Point. To obtain Oregon Inlet subtract 1 hour 17 min.; Cape Hatteras subtract 1 hour 59 min.; Virginia Beach subtract 1 hour 30 min.; Lynnhaven subtract 13 min.; and Kiptopeake subtract 40 min. To obtain approximate low tides add six hours to high tide times.

Folding tops for boats come in variety of styles

Folding tops for boats come in a variety of styles. On some, the front edge of the top is attached to the windshield with suitable snap fasteners. Straps or flaps at the rear end of the top attach to deck fasteners and put tension on the top to keep it standing. Other tops have straps both fore and aft to hold them up. By adjusting the straps, the forward part of such a top can be snugged down against the top of the windshield to shut out cold wind or spray. But on a fine day, the top can be repositioned with several inches between it and the top of the windshield.

Then there are "fisherman's tops." They vary in size and detail but as a group are characterized by being supported by a pair of uprights set well in from their edges. Many tops are easily fitted with side curtains, which can be very welcome from the aft end of the folding top down to the stern of the boat. This can convert the cockpit into an enclosed sleeping area for overnight or even week-long trips. It will also keep rain out of a boat when it is left at a dock or mooring. Study the various types of tops well, then you can choose one that will add greatly to the versatility and comfort of your boat!

Plan to buy Beach property voted down

A plan to purchase private property along Chesapeake Beach has fallen through, and with it probably will go the dunes it was designed to protect.

An ordinance authorizing the acquisition of 211 lots on Chesapeake Beach by the City of Virginia Beach for approximately $400,000 squeezed through City Council last week by a vote of 6-5.

Monday afternoon on second reading, Councilman Donald Merrick switched his vote from approval to denial, defeating the ordinance by a 6-5 vote.

As a result, some of the property owners who have building permits will build on the beach and destroy the dunes in their way, Hanbury said. Twelve of the lots are buildable, he said.

Before making the motion for denial, Merrick prognosticated that "it could be we are Algae: friend or foe?

Algae are very interesting aquatic plants. They differ from terrestrial plants by not having roots, leaves, stems or flowers. More than 25,000 species have been identified.

Many are simple single-cell, microscopic plants while others are more complex and range in size to the giant kelps which grow in the oceans.

Algae serve two important functions with regard to fish.

First, they are beginning links in a complex food chain that ultimately leads to the fish you catch.

Second, they are prolific producers of oxygen and continually enrich the water with this by-product of photosynthesis.

Although anglers may occasionally gripe about algae interfering with their activities, the real problem with algae comes from having too much of it.

Algae is able to reproduce and spread rapidly, given the right conditions of sunlight, water temperature and water nutrients.

This often causes a condition called algal bloom, where millions of tiny plants form rapidly on the surface of the water.

Their density can block sunlight from the water underneath, causing deeper algae and other plants to die, which — in turn — leads to decomposition and rapid oxygen depletion. This can kill fish.

Which is algae, friend or foe?

A little of both, it seems, although too much of a good thing can cause problems.

Beach utilities subject of study

That rules of good safety are frequently ignored and that a "hurry up and do" attitude on the part of at least one department head is subjecting personnel in the department to the risk of injury or death.

That engineering designs for the electrical systems in certain pumping stations are being approved even with the knowledge that a sound alternative is substantially cheaper in cost.

That the key management positions in the Department of Public Utilities are, in many cases, filled by inexperienced people who are helping contribute to bad management decisions and that those management decisions potentially represent a risk to the health and safety of the citizens of Virginia Beach.

The committee employed the consulting engineering firm of Bowman and Associates to investigate the technical side of the Reil's accusations.

Members of the Utilities Department interviewed by the committee included: Dennis Lee Duffield, water operations administrator; Judith Maxsom Mueller, assistant to the director; Charles J. Jeckell, Utilities engineer; Royal C. Thayer Jr., design engineer; Reil, and Jack Hull, former utilities electrician.

Among findings of the report:

The type of safety violations cited by Reil were to some extent verified by the film slide presentation produced by the city's Safety Office. The committee is satisfied that training programs now in effect will minimize or virtually eliminate most violations if pursued vigorously. Reil commented that so long as the same people are in management and running the program, he had no confidence that the training programs would be effective.

The Virginia Beach or Virginia Health Departments should not have been the ruling factor in the decision to remove and clean the section of piping which had obviously become contaminated with liquid mercury. The committee was "also disappointed when it observed the rather sloppy and potentially unsafe condition of storage of the U-Tube Manometer which apparently had existed for a year and a half."

The mercury incident which occurred of Feb. 1, 1978, refers to the possible contamination of the city's water when mercury from a manometer (a pressure measuring instrument) spilled into a pipeline at the 17th Street Pumping Station. Utilities claimed that 98 percent was recovered or accounted for. The report states that "it is doubtful that an accurate accounting would have been possible."

The committee was "surprised to observe during an inspection of the u-tube manometer that a quantity of liquid mercury has remained in the manometer case and exposed to the atmosphere for almost 18 months." The vapor is poisonous.

The Bowman report adequately supports Reil's argument "that public funds are not being used prudently in the design of the electrical systems for pumping stations. Facts are fairly conclusive that 480 volt equipment, if that voltage is available, would result in a substantial saving and should be used."

The electrical modifications to the 17th Street Pumping Station and the city's reversal of position in its belated purchase of equipment from Universal Engineered Systems (UES) revealed some questionable management decisions.

Records show that the Control Center Project initially was opposed by the city manager and that the director of public utilities and the consulting engineer were put in the position of mutually defending each other during the planning of the project.

At first glance, the Bowman report "gives the appearance of taking the middle of the road but it does to the satisfaction of the committee support some of Mr. Reil's contentions."

He said that "the purchase price may well be greater than $400,000, and in any event does not include a parking area, toilet facilities, walkways over the dunes. -- the amount we would have to invest to make it a public beach will be substantial."

He said that the Governor reported that tax receipts for April were low and that federal officials have indicated that April may have been the month that brings trended down. "It could be we're going to experience a recession deeper than we have known."

He said indications are that home fuel will cost a dollar a gallon....This country of ours is in turmoil....We may well need the balance we have (in the city's reserve fund) for something else we may need down the road."

Merrick said that the city was not in a position financially to protect those people (who persist in building close to the water). "I'm just scared to death."

Hanbury said that he would call off the appraisals and that some of the property still will not be given building permits under the city's policy of restricting building behind the six-foot contour. Others already have permits and can go ahead.

Mayor Patrick L. Stanning said that when the first storm comes, we'll have to spend a higher amount of money to rescue those people."

Keeping cool is a snap

How to keep cool in the summer has been of burning interest to man since time began. Not too long ago man had to work hard to beat the heat; today it's a snap, the snap of a switch on a central or room air conditioner.

Five thousand years ago, for example, a rich Assyrian merchant cooled his courtyard by having servants spray water into a room below it, taking advantage of the cooling effect of evaporating water. A simpler method was employed by King Xerxes of Persia; he kept dozens of slaves around waving fans.

Snow was hauled down from mountaintops by Roman slaves to cool their masters. The Caliph of Baghdad, around 775 A.D., built a summer house with hollow walls that were packed with imported snows.

"Around the 16th century some improvements were made," says John P. Farrell of York Heating and Air Conditioning. "A hand-operated bellows was rigged to blow air through a cave and into a home. Use was limited to the very rich...or very energetic."

A lazy man's means of cooling turned up in an "improved" rocking chair, patented in 1869. As a person rocked, a bellows was activated beneath the chair, forcing air out of a pipe over the person's head. Pneumatic ventilating systems were used in offices in the 1890's, and while it was not cool air, it was welcome relief.

Mechanical refrigeration, the forerunner of air conditioning, was developed for ice-making machinery, not comfort cooling. In 1885 York began producing ice-making machines, and by 1903 the firm had learned to transfer the principle to mechanical cooling to industrial processes.

In 1914 it unveiled the first combination of mechanical refrigeration with "air washing" and ventilation — air conditioning — at the Empire Theater in Montgomery, Ala. The San Joaquin Power and Light Company's office building was air conditioned in 1923, marking what is believed to be the first completely air conditioned office building in the world.

The nation's first successful room air conditioner was offered by York in 1935. Although the unit weighed 600 pounds, it was considered portable because it could be moved on casters. Regardless of its weight, it did provide homeowners with welcome relief from heat and humidity.

"Today it seems that everything is air conditioned," Farrell says. "It is hard to find a store, office or other public building that is not air conditioned. And that trend is spilling over into the home: Last year more than 50 percent of the houses built in the nation had central air conditioning."

Air conditioning at home is no longer a luxury, but a necessity for most people. Improved engineering has made whole-house air conditioners economical to install and operate, in spite of increasing utility rates.

Managing water

At least 80 percent of the drinking water produced by most American communities is not used for drinking at all. Instead, it's used in industry and irrigation, washing cars and cleaning floors. In a recent report, the experts at the American Chemical Society, a leading scientific organization, pointed out that highly treated wastewater could be an alternative supply for these needs, doing away with a lot of water wasting. This cannot, however, be put into effect very easily under our existing water control system.

As the competition for water becomes more intense in many parts of the country, regionalization and centralization of water management offer inherent advantages.

As it is, the management of water supplies does not always recognize basinwide needs. No incentives exist for residents of a watershed to cooperate in establishing their water supplies, and many communities are too small to finance proper treatment and monitoring. Although water management regions may be difficult to establish in this country where watersheds ignore political boundaries, nevertheless a purposeful movement toward more regionalized operations under federally established policy seems essential to sound, long-term conservation of our water resources.

Efficient storage for singles and couples

Storing food properly is the best way to avoid waste and reduce your total food expenditures — especially if you cook for only one or two.

• MAKE GOOD USE OF FREEZER SPACE—Meat items, leftovers and any foods prepared in quantity such as soups or casseroles should be packaged for freezing in single serving portions wherever possible—even if you're a couple. All freezer containers or wraps must be moisture resistant and air-tight, of course.

• A SPACIOUS REFRIGERATOR IS A BOON—Many items that families often store on the shelf are better off in the refrigerator of the small household. Mustard, catsup, pickles and preserves stay around the single's kitchen long enough that they need the extra protection of the colder temperatures.

Organize your cupboards so that canned and packaged goods don't get lost or unnecessarily duplicated. You might even invest in a wax marker to label these items with the purchase date.

• FRESH PRODUCE DESERVES SPECIAL ATTENTION—Avocados are like many tree fruits—they should not be refrigerated until they reach the desired texture for eating. At this point they can be refrigerated. A softened avocado will stay in good eating condition in the refrigerator for up to five days. If you find yourself with a ready-to-eat avocado and no chance to use it, let your freezer save your investment. Simply peel and seed it, mash the pulp with a little lemon juice and freeze it in an airtight container. Better yet, use the fruit to make this different and delicious frozen dessert; serve it for a special dinner for two. Set your freezer at the lowest temperature for the finest texture.

beach military update

Walsh

Harvey T. Walsh III, son of Edwina D. and Harvey T. Walsh Jr. of Leeward Shore Court, Virginia Beach, has been commissioned a Navy U.S. Naval Academy in Annapolis, Md.

As a midshipman at the Academy, he underwent four years of extensive study of engineering, mathematics, physical and marine sciences, management and government. In addition to an active physical fitness curriculum, he studied military justice, leadership and Naval history and completed a variety of elective courses leading to his baccalaureate.

Summer programs provided him with an opportunity to gain professional experience aboard naval vessels and at Navy and Marine Corps shore installations. During training cruises, he received practical instruction in basic seamanship, navigation, ordnance, gunnery and communications. He participated in battle drills and learned to control and fire shipboard weapons.

He is a 1975 graduate of Frank W. Cox High School.

Robinson

Marine Corporal David W. Robinson, son of Norbert E. and Patricia F. Robinson of John Hancock Dr., Virginia Beach, has reported for duty at Marine Corps Base, Camp Butler on Okinawa.

A 1977 graduate of Floyd E. Kellam High School, he joined the Marine Corps in February 1977.

Mitchell

Pvt. William M. Mitchell, whose wife, Marion, lives in Virginia Beach, recently completed training as an armor reconnaissance specialist at Fort Know, Ky.

The training was conducted under the One Station Unit Training (OSUT) program, which combines basic combat training and advanced individual training into one 13-week period.

The armor reconnaissance specialist course consists of weapons training, including mines and demolitions, maintenance of armor vehicles, map reading, communications, and artillery adjustments.

He entered the Army in February 1979.

Thomlinson

Navy Interior Communications Electrician David L. Thomlinson, son of Donald and Jean Thomlinson of Prince Phillip Court, Virginia Beach, was graduated from the Basic Interior Communications Electricians School.

During the 16-week course at the Naval Training Center, San Diego, students received instruction of the skills and technical requirements to operate and maintain switchboards and ships' communications systems. They additionally studied electrical circuitry testing equipment and the use of wiring diagrams.

A 1975 graduate of First Colonial High School, he joined the navy in August 1978.

Wilson

Spec. 4 Henry E. Wilson III, whose parents live on Trestman Ave., Virginia Beach, recently was assigned as a mail clerk with the 1st Infantry Division at Fort Riley, Kan.

Wilson entered the Army in July 1976.

Rutledge

Cadet Kenneth L. Rutledge, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Rutledge, Wingate Way, Virginia Beach, is receiving practical work in military leadership at the Army ROTC Advanced Camp at Fort Bragg, N.C.

The six-week training includes instruction in first aid, communications, marksmanship, orienteering, weapons, weapon systems, defensive and offensive tactics, reconno techniques and numerous other areas.

Most cadets are fulfilling their advanced camp requirement during the summer between their junior and senior years in college. The successful completion of the advanced camp and graduation from their respective college or university will result in the student being commissioned a second lieutenant in the Active Army or the U.S. Army Reserve or National Guard.

Rutledge is a student at Norfolk State College.

Utilities Dept. report released

The Bowman report addressing specific complaints of Reil, finds:

1. Rosemont Booster Station — normal situations that would likely be found in any preventive maintenance inspection, but in the Maverick Street Pump Station, it is obvious that no recent preventive maintenance inspection has been made.

2. North Virginia Beach Pump Station, 59th Street — Reil is correct in maintaining that the station could have been constructed more economically with a 480-volt service in lieu of a 208-volt service. The savings is estimated to be in excess of $2,000 after paying Virginia Electric and Power Company $1,800 to $2,000 a one-time charge for the service.

3. Lake Smith Terrace Pump Station — no supporting documentation that the consulting engineer was paid to correct any errors which existed on initial construction documents.

4. Control Center Project — Reil's contention that the contract should not have been awarded is without foundation. Reil's statement that the city paid $100,000 more than it should for the project is totally unsupported.

The report also finds that the mercury incident was handled so as to minimize and clarify and potential health hazard and that in fact there was no health hazard posed to any citizen of Virginia Beach by this incident.

The report also shows that $22,000 worth of engineering costs shown could have been saved on the Control Center Project if Reil had not been removed from the management position of the project. Other cost overruns charged by Reil from the original estimate of $188,000 in the 1974-79 Capital Improvements Program to the estimates which now approach 1.5 to $1.6 million are attributed to the inclusion of pump station and line pressure requested by the city.

During a press conference Monday, Ervin said that since the resignation of Reil the city has been using consultants and outside contractors to furnish expertise in electrical engineering. He said the city has a lot of sophisticated equipment and should not rely on consultants and contractors.

Ervin also emphasized that tests have indicated there is no mercury in the drinking water in the Beach Borough system.

In answer to questions, Ervin said that he "can't determine whether he (Reil) was given a fair forum. I don't believe they ignored all his recommendations."

Reil said that he was "interested and concerned about the people and believed in doing my job..." As an engineer, he said that he was bound to uphold the standards for professional practice and conduct of the Virginia Department of Professional and Occupational Regulations, and read from a copy, on "responsibility to the public. — The professional shall at all times recognize his primary obligation to the public in the performance of his professional duties. If his professional judgment is overruled under circumstances where the safety, health, property and welfare of the public are endangered, he shall inform his employer or client of the possible consequences and notify appropriate authorities."

"The ethics code of the city," he said, "prohibits free expressions of concern...Who has the feelings of the citizens at heart? The investment is minimal."

"In my opinion you border as a genius," Ervin said, but explained that, "if you're asking for a valued judgement, we can't give one."

What the report says, he elaborated, is, "You've got a little problem here."

As a result of the study, Holland said, the city manager is going to look at all departments.

NAS Oceana: swampland to Master Jet Base

Air Operations is the heart beat of a vital and dynamic Master Jet Base called Naval Air Station Oceana. Its pulse rate is one take-off or landing every two minutes, 11,000 times per month. There are over seven miles of runway. The latest equipment is utilized to serve the military air traffic of the East Coast. The only way to really appreciate Oceana's tremendous growth and importance, however, is to look back into the past.

Oceana was originally carved out of 328 acres of swampland in 1940 as an auxiliary airfield. Wartime growth pushed its status to Naval Auxiliary Air Station in 1943 and by war's end the number of men and aircraft aboard had tripled.

In 1952 Oceana was designated a Naval Air Station and the Master Jet Base concept was taking shape. By 1954 Oceana was an all-weather air station, and by 1957 it was officially designated a Master Jet Base.

The longest runways in Tidewater and its location within the city limits of Virginia Beach, near the warming currents of the Atlantic Gulf Stream, enable Oceana to operate when other East Coast fields cannot.

Over the past 35 years Oceana has grown to more than 16 times its original size so that today it is a complex of over 5,000 acres, it is now "home" for about 9,000 personnel and some 11,000 of their dependents.

With the introduction of such high performance complex jets as the A-4 Skyhawk, the F-4 Phantom, the A-6 Intruder and the F-14 Tomcat, and the F-5E Tiger II, Oceana has become the home of the world's most advanced naval aircraft. In addition to these, Oceana has a Search and Rescue (SAR) unit which flies the H-46 Sea Knight and provides rescue service to both military and civilian communities.

Four squadrons for training aircrews and maintenance personnel are permanently stationed at NAS Oceana. Attack Squadron Forty Two (VA-42) is the A-6 Intruder training unit, Fighter Squadron Forty Three (VF-43) performs both instrument and Air Combat Maneuvering training, Fighter Squadron One Zero One (VF-101) conducts F-14 Tomcat training, and Fighter Squadron One Seven One (VF-171) trains F-4 Phantom pilots. Oceana's Naval Air Maintenance Training Detachment is also a training unit, training highly qualified maintenance technicians for A-4 Skyhawk, A-6 Intruder, F-4 Phantom II and F-14 Tomcat squadrons.

Knutson relieves Lynch as executive officer at NAS Oceana

Captain Jerry G. Knutson recently relieved Captain Robert B. Lynch as executive officer of Naval Air Station Oceana in Virginia Beach. "Moving across the hangar," Captain Knutson detached from his staff duties with Commander Tactical Wings Atlantic (COMTACWING-SLANT) to become the new X.O.

Captain Knutson is no stranger to NAS Oceana. Prior to serving with COMTACWING-SLANT at Oceana, he served with two Oceana based fighter squadrons and an Oceana based Carrier Air Wing. The Oceana based commands are: CVW-7, VF-102, and VF-32. Captain Knutson served as CVW-7's Landing Signal Officer, filled a billet as administrative officer and one as operations officer in VF-102, and is a former Commanding Officer of VF-32.

Captain Jerry G. Knutson

A native of North Dakota, Captain

Knutson entered the U.S. Naval Academy at Annapolis, Maryland in June 1953. Graduating from the academy in 1957, he reported to Pensacola, Florida for flight training and won his pilot wings in late 1958.

During his aviation career, Captain Knutson has accumulated over 4,000 flight hours in numerous fighter and attack aircraft and has participated in widely varied operational and training deployments and exercises on 11 different aircraft carriers.

Captain Knutson is married to the former Theresa LeMieux of Stanley, North Dakota. He and his wife reside in Virginia Beach with their four children.

In his new assignment, Captain Lynch will serve as Chief of Staff for Commander Cruiser Destroyer Group (COMCRUDESGRU) One.

Advice from the Veterans Administration

Q — I am the widow of a Korean conflict veteran and have one dependent child. Our combined annual income is $1,916. Am I eligible for a widow's pension under the new improved law?

A — You may be entitled to a widow's pension since your income is below the $3,425 limit for a widow with one dependent child. Contact your nearest Veterans Administration regional office for information and assistance.

Q — Due to a financial emergency, I am thinking about surrendering my National Service Life Insurance policy. I am hesitant to do this because I have had this policy since World War II. Is there an alternative available to me?

A — You may consider the option of applying for a maximum policy loan. You can receive 94 percent of the policy's cash value at five percent interest. This would permit you to repay the loan and keep your insurance in force.

Q — Does the Veterans Administration recognize "common law" marriage?

A — The VA will recognize "common law" marriage if the state in which the parties reside does so. Proof of the "common law" marriage must be established to VA satisfaction to qualify for benefits. Contact your nearest VA regional office for assistance.

Sandbridge residents oppose road

Conflicting interests bar access to False Cape State Park

The energy crisis has emerged to further hamper the development of False Cape State Park, a wonderland at the southern end of Virginia Beach to which there seems to be no access acceptable to all.

Councilwoman Barbara Henley said Monday afternoon that "in light of the energy (problem) maybe we have to rethink developing the park."

Sheila Price, president of the Sandbridge Civic League, didn't go that far. She just told council that the people in Sandbridge didn't want access to the park to go through Sandbridge. She said that a council resolution June 11 objecting to a route over Back Bay, suggested among others by state officials, left only a route through Sandbridge.

A road to the state park, she said, would radically change the area and if Sandpiper Road had to be widened the 500 lots, mostly developed, along the way would probably have to be condemned.

Councilman Reid Ervin said that, "I don't think my vote to eliminate the causeway route was a vote to go through Sandbridge." He said he was also opposed to a Sandbridge access.

Agricultural area to be preserved

Council opposed the causeway route because it would encourage development which might destroy the agricultural area of the city.

Mayor Patrick L. Standing, who was not present at the June 11 meeting, said that he was not going to make a commitment on whether to support access through Sandbridge, but that he thought it would be detrimental to have a major thoroughfare through a residential neighborhood. He said, however, he would not make a decision until a study committee completes its deliberations.

Standing said that if the property south of the Sandbridge residential community had not been acquired by the city (Little Island), the federal government the National Wildlife Refuge and the state (False Cape), it would have been developed just like the rest of Sandbridge with a street running the length.

In reference to an article circulated by the league, Mrs. Henley said she felt "indicted by the article." "However you get there you're going to impact the area."

The June resolution included a comment that the city encouraged the development of False Cape. At the time, she said, she asked for a delay, but the resolution, she said, was merely a reaction to alternate routes suggested by the state committee.

"My feeling was we could not adopt the plan if we were going to have a causeway...The problem has so many ramifications there is no easy solution."

More beach for the public sought

She said four conflicts exist - the interest of the Sandbridge people, preserving the agricultural areas of Pungo and Knotts Island, the outer banks communities who have been pressing for access, and state and local people working to acquire more beach for the public.

Ervin said that no specific recommendation has been made by council... "You've assumed that by elimination, only Sandbridge is left." He said he intended to present a further resolution and invited Mrs. Price to return for the Aug. 6 meeting of council.

Councilman Clarence A. Holland suggested that eliminations should be made now, all at the same time and not piecemeal.

Mrs. Henley said that other alternatives should be studied and added that "maybe we have to rethink developing the park."

A letter referred to at the meeting and written by Richard Klise, a Sandbridge resident, charged that Mrs. Henley's representation of the people stopped at the farm fence.

Councilwoman Meyera Oberndorf, in answer to reported charges that council discussed the resolution in executive session, said that this statement was not true. "Nothing has been done in executive session," she said.

Outstanding Leadership Awards were presented recently to students graduating from each of the six high schools in Virginia Beach. Pictured in Washington, D.C. above, left to right, are James Davis, Bayside High School; Beth Allen, Kempsville; Becky Tebault, Kellam; Mary Taylor, Princess Anne; D.D. Parker, Cox; Beth Curran, First Colonial; Congressman G. Wm. Whitestur, Mrs. Mary S. Barrace, Leadership Award Chairman; and P.J. Torveer, representing Senator John Warner's staff. The Outstanding Leadership Program is sponsored by the Virginia Beach Republican Women's Club. Students are presented with a certificate of award and savings bonds. They spend a day in Washington, D.C., lunch with Congressman G. Wm. Whitestur, attend meetings with all Senators and Congressmen of Virginia, tour the House of Representatives and the Senate and listen to hearings in committees. The purpose of the program is to encourage students to become politically involved in their community, state and federal government. The program is in its sixth year and was founded by Mary Barrace.

Virginia Beach City Councilman W.L. Riggs is willing to do his bit for energy conservation -- and go coatless, maybe tieless.

Since the President has ordered institutions to keep their thermostats at 78 or higher in the summer, Riggs figured the place to start was the Administration Building.

To go with the higher temperature, he suggested that council members go coatless. He said dress should be optional. Although council has no dress code as such, coats are in at council meetings. The exceptions are press photographers, an independent breed that learned long ago how to be comfortable.

Riggs pointed out that the Army, the Navy, the Police and firemen all had summer dress. Then he started questioning his colleagues to find out how they dressed in their businesses. "I don't think any of you wears a jacket at your business," he said. Most agreed.

Mayor Patrick L. Standing said something about shirt sleeves and sundresses, in deference to the two women council members.

Riggs figures that with council taking the lead, more relaxed dress standards will trickle down to all personnel at the civic center.

City Manager George L. Hanbury said that a consulting firm is making a survey of the Municipal Complex to determine what can be done to save energy.

With Riggs, it's a matter of keeping your cool.

Country residents to be warned of 'nuisances'

People who want to live in the country are going to be warned beforehand that it may not be all melodious birds singing madrigals.

Virginia Beach City Council Monday afternoon amended its subdivision ordinance to require an agricultural disclosure statement on all final subdivision plats in agricultural-zoned areas.

State enabling legislation allows the city to do this in the case of new construction, but City Manager George L. Hanbury said the city is going to seek enabling legislation to apply to resale property as well.

What the prospective buyer will be told is the "possibility of noise, dust, odor, chemical spraying, the like."

Newcomers to such areas, Hanbury pointed out, often complain of what they perceive to be nuisances associated with agricultural activity.

With the disclosure statement, the possible effects of the raising of crops and livestock would be made explicit to all potential residents prior to the establishment of their residence in such areas.

Councilwoman Barbara Henley said she saw "this as a beginning of disclosure. I approve of anything along this line."

The amendment was approved unanimously.

Illegal structures dot North End public beaches

A deck here, a gazebo there, a shed, fencing, plantings. Nothing defensive except that they're all located in public property at the North End of the beach on the city's access roads.

City Manager George L. Hanbury told council Monday afternoon at an informal session that the structures and plantings are on public property and the public has the right to use them.

He said that since council has been so reluctant to permit encroachments on the seaside, he thought that council should take a closer look at the encroachments in the North End. The city is always looking for more public beaches, and the beaches at the North End already belong to the public.

He said that a complete inventory of all the encroachments will take about 60 days. In the meantime he gave council a bird's eye view with slides. Among the encroachments pointed out was a deck between 86th and 87th Street, a brick walkway along 86th Street, a planter, a patio on the dunes, a wall on the beach side and 74th Street side of a dwelling, a gazebo, a shed, fencing and two more decks. All are on public property.

He said that one property owner had scattered the dunes and planted core grass which later died. The city is proceeding against the property owner to restore the dunes.

Hanbury said that he could not recommend official approval of "any encroachment such as this." Every one of the decks was built without permits, he said.

The alternatives - do nothing, permit no more encroachments in the future or require that all encroachments be removed.

He said he had asked the North Virginia Beach Civic League to be a watchdog for the community to keep more encroachments from going up.

Councilman Reid Ervin said that the city, in installing utilities in the North End, was going to get into a lot of incidents where there are street encroachments such as shrubbery.

Mayor Patrick L. Standing said that perpetrators of all encroachments should be put on notice.

Councilman John A. Baum noted that the "people who ask permission don't get it and people who don't (ask), get away with it."

Council recently turned down an encroachment request made by Greenco Corporation to expand Seaside Park.

Hanbury noted of the North Enders that "everything they've done is illegal."

Vice Mayor J. Henry McCoy Jr. said, "The law is the law. These people took a chance. If they didn't make an effort to find out."

Hanbury said that the problem has been that encroachments had been tolerated until the city became concerned with the dunes.

He admitted that street encroachments were city-wide.

Ervin pointed out that if everyone in the North End got to do what they're doing on 72nd Street, planting in the right of way, access to the beach will be blocked and other streets will have to handle the traffic. "There ought to be a policy."

Hanbury said he would bring back alternatives and recommendations.

Transporting gasoline is risky business

Would you feel safe transporting a load of dynamite in the back of your car?

"In essence motorists are doing just that when they carry portable containers of gasoline in their car trunk," according to John T. Hanna, director, Virginia Department of Transportation Safety. "One gallon of gasoline has the explosive power of 14 sticks of dynamite. When stored in cans or bottles in the trunk of a vehicle, gasoline can be set off by a minor rear end collision or a spark from a short in a tail light or brake light. The end result can be fatal."

Despite the high degree of risk involved many drivers continue to transport extra fuel in their vehicle. The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA) reports that the sale and production of gasoline cans has risen by as much as 100 per cent since motorists became concerned over the availability of gas.

"If this is any indication of an increase in gas cans carried on the highway, we have a very hazardous situation on our hands," said Hanna. "Even drivers who use storage containers labeled safety cans are not free from danger. No gas can is designed to withstand a rear end collision if carried in a car or its trunk. Also, gasoline vapors can leak out and catch fire if a can is kept in a closed area."

NHTSA advises motorists to consider transporting fuel "only in the most extreme emergencies." The container used "should be rugged, securely closed but vented and protected against accidental spillage or damage."

"Never keep gasoline in glass bottles," warned Hanna. "If you must store gasoline, store it only for a short time in an approved safety can which has a flame arrester and pressure-release valve. Leave room within the can for the gas to expand and refrain from smoking while gas is being carried."

Think cool: summer's sizzle can be overcome

"It's not the heat, it's the humidity," say the experts.

Whenever you find that either the blazing sun or the dense moisture make you feel as though you're in a steam bath with your clothes on, you might want to plunge into an icy stream. And since icy streams are rarely available when you most need them, here are 10 ways to cool down and freshen up when the mercury is climbing.

A light flowery or green fragrance can make you feel cooler. Spray a bit of cologne on an artificial flower and pin it to your hair. This will also help keep straggly hair off your face. Another way to give the illusion of being in a field of wildflowers while you're actually on a stuffy commuter bus is to dab some scent on a cotton ball and tuck it in your handbag.

Only complexions tend to become oilier still in hot weather, so it may be necessary to switch to a concentrated astringent. Keep astringent and skin fresheners in the refrigerator at home and keep an extra bottle at the office with cotton balls for a quick blotting. If you press (not rob) moistened cotton on nose, forehead and chin, you can remove oil without disturbing your makeup.

Powder helps minimize the shine on your nose. A translucent powder in a compact can be applied in the morning to set makeup and whenever your

Girls' Camp Fund raises funds to send 1000 girls to camp

The Girls Camp Fund will hold an auction over WCMS radio on Monday, July 23. The auction will be broadcast from 7 a.m. to 8 p.m.

The gifts that will be auctioned include art works, clothing, jewelry, furniture, appliances, complimentary dinners at local restaurants, camping weekends, and many other services and items. They will be displayed at Military Circle Mall on Saturday, July 21, all day. Bids can be made at Military Circle that day.

Anyone interested in donating an article or service may call Kitty Wolf at 625-6625 or write G.F.C. P.O. Box 3127 Norfolk, Va. 23514.

All donations are completely tax deductible and the donors' names will be on display at the mall and announced on WCMS radio unless otherwise specified.

The Girls' Camp Fund Committee was founded in 1949 by Mrs. Ben Paul Snyder, who with a group of friends, raised the money to send 30 girls to the Salvation Army Camp. For 30 years under the chairmanship of Mrs. Snyder, the number of girls sent to camp has steadily increased.

The committee's goal is to send over 1000 girls to camp from the Tidewater area this summer. Last year a record number of 1038 were sent, bringing the total to over 20,000 in the past 30 years.

Young Artists Composition Program takes Beach musician to Boston

Jonathan A. Sturm, son of Dr. and Mrs. William Sturm of Thalia Drive, Virginia Beach, is a participant in the Young Artists Composition Program at the Boston University Tanglewood Institute.

Sturm has been composing music for piano and violin for two and a half years and has been playing the violin for 11 years. A member of the Norfolk Symphony Orchestra for three seasons, Sturm has played solo for the orchestra seven times. He placed third in the Virginia Statewide Music Competition.

The Young Artists Composition Program provides instruction and criticism of original compositions. Students interchange with established composers of the Berkshire Music Center to attend seminars in composition and read works in progress. The end of the eight-week program is marked by a public performance of works selected by the faculty. Maurice Wright, director of electronic music activities and instructor in music theory and composition at the Boston University School of Music, is director of the Young Artists Composition Program.

The Boston University Tanglewood Institute's summer programs are for promising young musicians from throughout the United States. Located in Lenox, Massachusetts, Tanglewood has been the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for 30 years. It is also the setting for the orchestra's special summer activities, the Berkshire Festival and the Berkshire Music Center. The Tanglewood Institute, now in its 14th season, is operated by Boston University in cooperation with the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Music Center.

Renovation contract goes to Bayport Construction

Virginia Beach Public Schools today awarded a contract for renovating the Old Donation Center for the Gifted and Talented to the Bayport Construction firm of Virginia Beach. Bayport submitted a low base bid of $425,000. Work on the center, located at 1008 Perry Plantation Road in Bayside, is expected to begin immediately.

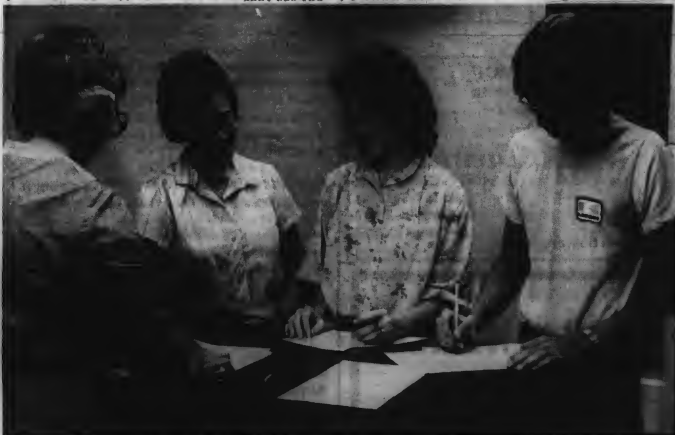

The renovation will involve converting many of Old Donation's classrooms to accommodate the planned expansion of the gifted program. Among the new facilities will be a science lab, math lab, sculpture and ceramics rooms, a photo lab, music and art rooms, and a dance studio.

Also, the multi-purpose cafeteria will gain a projection booth, an increased stage area, and the addition of a set and costume design lab behind the stage.

Classroom renovations are scheduled to be completed in time for the center to open to more than 1,000 gifted students this fall, according to Virginia Beach Public Schools' architect, John McCabe. The remainder of the work, he said, should be completed by mid-April.

Students who attended Old Donation Elementary School last year are from the Indian Lakes area and this fall will move to the newly-built Indian Lakes Elementary on Homestead Drive, along with principal Mrs. Peggy Bryson and her staff. The Old Donation Center will be headed by Dr. K. Edwin Brown and teachers who had already taught in the gifted program at other Virginia Beach schools.

About 1,050 students in grades three through seven will attend the center for one day each week. By the end of the 1979-80 school year, the center's programs will be expanded to include secondary students.

New students register at Green Run High

On July 5, Virginia Beach's newest high school - Green Run - opened its doors for new student registration. Among the first to register were Tina Brown, 15, and her brother Wayne, 16, who came to the resort city this summer from Millington, Tennessee. In the photo, Tina and Wayne go over their new courses with their mother, Mrs. Judith Brown, and Mrs. Barbara McMillan, guidance director for the 2,000-student school. The new high school is open for student registration Monday-Friday from 8:30 a.m. to 3 p.m. It is located on Dahlia Drive in Green Run just west of the Tanglewood and Cedarwood subdivisions.

Q. My home canned grape jelly has mold on top of the paraffin. Is it safe to eat the jelly?

A. In the past it was felt that the mold could be scraped off with the paraffin and the jelly eaten safely. However, in recent years there has been evidence that some molds produce toxins that can be injurious to health. Such a toxin has not been found in jelly but in light of the evidence, USDA now recommends packaging jellied products in jars which can be sealed and processed in a hot water bath. Since molds may penetrate deeper than the surface it is best not to eat jellies with mold on the surface. If you receive a gift of jelly sealed with paraffin to help minimize mold growth, store in the refrigerator.

Q. The leaves keep falling off my jade plant and a white, moldy substance seeps from the joints. What's wrong and what should I do?

A. The substance is actually an insect called a mealybug. It literally sucks the life out of the plant which is why the leaves are falling. Take a cotton swab dipped in alcohol and wipe them off.

Q. The leaves are falling of the miniature orange tree I bought last fall and it doesn't bear fruit anymore. What's wrong?

A. Sounds like a combination of low light and low humidity. This will cause leaves to fall and prevent flower buds from forming. Without flowers there can be no fruit. Place the plant in a shaded outdoor location until late September and hope it revives.

Q. When is the best time for fall lawn seeding? Should I overseed my lawn with rye grass in the winter?

A. Fescue 31 should be established mid September through October. Bermuda could be overseeded with rye, but this is not recommended for Fescue 31. If no other grasses will grow then try annual rye. You will at least have some grass part of the year.

VIRGINIA BEACH PUBLIC NOTICE NOTICE OF FINDING OF NO SIGNIFICANT EFFECT ON THE ENVIRONMENT

Notice is herein given that the City of Virginia Beach has conducted an environmental review and has made a FINDING OF NO SIGNIFICANT EFFECT ON THE ENVIRONMENT for the Acquisition of Real Property 4th program year (1978-79) activity.

The City proposes to utilize Federal Funds under Title I of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974 (Public Law 93-383), reauthorized and amended by Congress as of 1977, for the acquisition of real property activity.

ACTIVITY: The scope and purpose of the Acquisition of Real Property activity involves the following:

- (1) using funds to obtain "Utility Easements" where necessary to install badly needed water/sewer systems in Community Development target areas;
- (2) using funds to obtain drainage easements;
- (3) acquiring property for Right-of-Ways to provide target neighborhoods with effective street improvements;
- (4) acquiring property for utility pumping stations; and
- (5) any other Community Development activities needing property for the purpose of easements, acquisitions, dedications, etc.

Obtaining an easement in this case means that the City provides easement compensation to property owners for the right/permission to use a strip or piece of property for drainage purposes, and for the installation, repair, etc. of water and sewer lines. The utility easement is permanent unless the City vacates the land.

In the case of acquiring property for street improvement right-of-way purposes, the property owner sells the land to the City in which the City has "Fee Simple" (full title) ownership of only the property used for the right-of-way purpose. Acquiring property for utility pump station sites also involves fee simple ownership by the City.

FUNDS: The City proposes to request from HUD through a REQUEST FOR RELEASE OF FUNDS ADVERTISEMENT AND CERTIFICATION that $55,000 be released from the Fourth Year CDBG Program funds in order that this and other associated activities be implemented.

FINDING: Through evaluation of the scope and purpose of the Acquisition of Real Property activity, the City has determined that this activity will have NO SIGNIFICANT EFFECT ON THE ENVIRONMENT. Therefore, the City has decided not to prepare an Environmental Impact Statement under the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (Public Law 91-190), and no further environmental review of this activity will be conducted unless future information is deemed to have a significant impact on the clearance level of this activity.

REASONS FOR FINDING: From the City's review to date, the Acquisition of Real Property activity -

- (1) will have no adverse impact on the geological, cultural, archaeological, architectural, or historical aspects of the Community Development target areas;
- (2) is not adversely affected by a flood plain, coastal zone or wetlands area;
- (3) will not disrupt wildlife in the target areas;
- (4) will not create an air quality problem;
- (5) will only produce short-term low-level noise during the implementation of projects associated with the property acquisition activity (such as water/sewer projects, drainage/street improvement projects, etc.);
- (6) will aid in improving air and water quality because of the construction of projects associated with this activity;
- (7) will only produce, possibly, some minor short-term adverse environmental effects during the implementation of projects associated with this activity; and
- (8) has the support and endorsement of the target area residents and the City Council of the City of Virginia Beach.

Pursuant to Section 104(h) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974, amended as of 1977, and the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (Public Law 91-190), and Environmental Review Record has been prepared for the Acquisition of Real Property activity which may be examined at the Office of Housing and Community Development, 302 Twenty-second Street, Virginia Beach, Virginia, 23451, between 9:00 a.m. and 5:00 p.m., Monday through Friday, except on holidays. Written comments on the above environmental review record will be received by Benjamin C. Moore, Assistant to the City Manager for Housing and Community Development, at the above address no later than 5:00 p.m., Wednesday, August 8, 1979.

APPLICANT: City of Virginia Beach, Virginia

The NSPRA award of merit, equivalent to a second place, went to "Insight," a community newsletter to parents, "The Catalyst," a newsletter for school division employees, and to the parent orientation brochure, "Minimum Competencies."

The three award-winning publications are produced by the Public Information Office of Virginia Beach Public Schools.

The NSPRA contest was divided between school division publications and college level publications. At each level, entries could be made into ten separate categories. Each category is divided into three sections according to the size of the school division.

There were a total of 502 college, school division and individual school contestants submitting more than 1,300 entries in the national contest.

Beach photographer takes awards

Ron Marano, president of Ron Marano Photography in Virginia Beach, won several photography awards at the 81st annual convention of the Virginia Professional Photographers Association. The convention was held earlier this month in Norfolk's Omni International Hotel.

Marano's night photograph of the ship "Argosent" won both the Best Industrial Photograph Award and the Grand Commercial Photograph Award. The photograph was taken at the direction of Arthur Polizzi Associates Inc., Norfolk-based public relations and advertising agency, for Norshipco (Norfolk Shipbuilding & Drydock Corp.). The "Argosent" was being serviced in Norshipco's new floating drydock when the photograph was taken.

Marano also won the Southeastern Professional Photographers Association's Southeastern Award for a separate photograph. Titled "Togetherness is," the photograph won as a special category print.

Public right diminishes

The best thing about the U.S. Supreme Court's decision permitting judges to bar the press and public from pre-trial hearings in criminal cases is that four justices voted against it.

As in most cases involving free press-fair trial questions, the court was compelled to weigh conflicting rights. The First Amendment fosters a free press and the Sixth Amendment projects a defendant's right to a trial "by an impartial jury."

In the New York case at issue, a 5-4 majority upheld two lower court rulings that the threat of prejudicial, pre-trial publicity warranted a decision to close the preliminary hearing. But the decision granted judges virtual carte blanche authority to close any preliminary hearing.

The court went too far.

Granted, there may be a danger of prejudicial publicity stemming from press coverage in a distinct minority of pre-trial hearings. But giving judges a free hand to close any preliminary hearing is excessive and dangerous.

Fully 90 percent of all criminal cases never go to trial. Thus the pre-trial hearing becomes the decisive step in the judicial process. As a result of the hearing, either the charges are dropped, the defendant decides to plead guilty, or a plea-bargaining arrangement is reached.

For these defendants — nine of every ten persons charged — pre-trial publicity is not a constitutional issue because there is no trial.

But defense lawyers, who can be expected to shield their clients from any publicity, will usually agitate for closed hearings. Under this ruling, we would guess that most judges will go along, if only to avoid a protracted wrangle and thus speed up the process.

The public's right to know will be diminished. And the ultimate losers will include everyone with an interest in an open criminal justice system.

'Average' pay $162,000

Two intriguing items in the news recently bring home the ravages of inflation.

The newly minted Susan B. Anthony "silver" dollar just put into circulation is not much larger than a quarter and is devoid of silver. It has about three cents worth of copper and nickel.

This is a far cry from the time, not so many years ago, when visitors to Las Vegas could get all the real silver dollars their paper money would buy.

Americans needed no economists to advise them when their silver dollars became too valuable to circulate because paper money had been debased. In a classic example of Gresham's law, because it was driven out by the cheaper currency.

As though to underline the Anthony dollar's weakness, the Social Security Administration gave out some startling figures the other day. A 20-year-old worker starting out today will be entitled to receive $64,000 a year when he or she retires 45 years hence, in the year 2025. The Social Security people predict the average wage in that year will be $162,000 with Social Security taxes being levied on all earnings up to $378,000 a year.

By comparison, the maximum individual Social Security benefit now is $6,390 and the average is $5,082, the maximum payroll tax is $1,404 on earnings of $22,900.

The scary part of all this is the certain knowledge that it will be as difficult to get by on Social Security benefits of $64,000 in the year 2025 as it is for pensioners to make ends meet now on only $5,000.

Speeding arrests continue to climb despite reminders of 55 m.p.h. limit

Speeding arrests continue to climb in the Old Dominion despite efforts to encourage voluntary compliance with the national maximum speed limit of 55 miles per hour.

The Virginia State Police reported that through May of this year speeding arrests and/or summonses for exceeding the 55 m.p.h. speed limit have increased 44.5 percent over the same five-month period last year. With respect to commercial vehicles, the number of speeding arrests has increased 67.1 percent.

According to a spokesman for the Department of State Police, the statistics show 86,565 speeding arrests and/or summonses through May of this year compared to 59,900 this time in 1978 — an increase of 26,665. These figures include the more than 5,000 speeding arrests over the recent Memorial Day weekend.

"It is a difficult situation," said the department spokesman. "All motorists are surely aware of the need to conserve fuel, the general public has been informed through the news media that driving 55 saves lives and we've recently learned that federal highway funding is going to be dependent on a state's ability to encourage voluntary compliance with the 55 m.p.h. standard. Still, the number of arrests for speeding is increasing."

Part of the increased number of arrests may be the result of an intensified selective enforcement program by Virginia troopers and another factor may be the return of many troopers to their regular duty stations from a special assignment in the Southwest Virginia coalfields in 1978. However, it also is apparent that highway speeds have gradually accelerated since the oil crisis of 1974 diminished.

"Motorists, particularly those driving commercial vehicles it seems, appear to have lost a little faith in the fact that there really is a gas shortage," the department spokesman said. "Everyone wants to believe that the gas shortage is contrived simply to raise the price of gasoline."

Convincing motorists of the need to conserve fuel may be primarily an objective of the State Office on Energy, according to the State Police. Convincing motorists that driving 55 saves lives may be primarily an objective for the Department of Transportation Safety. Encouraging driving 55 because federal highway funds are going to be dependent on voluntary compliance may be primarily an objective for the Department of Highways and Transportation.

However, the fact is that the maximum speed limit of 55 miles per hour is the law. "I guess this is what is called the 'bottom line,'" said the spokesman, "and enforcing the law is primarily an objective for the State Police."

"This is not to imply," he continued, "that saving fuel, saving lives and maintaining the flow of highway funds is not everybody's problem. We are all working together to accomplish these objectives."

"However by driving 55, motorists would not only avoid a speeding arrest but also contribute to the accomplishment of these other critical objectives."

Campaign against traffic sign vandalism begins

The Virginia Department of Transportation Safety and the Virginia Department of Highways and Transportation have announced a statewide program to reduce incidents of sign vandalism in Virginia and to create public awareness of this costly safety hazard.

According to the State Highway Department more than 40,000 traffic signs are damaged or stolen each year in Virginia. The cost of sign vandalism to Virginia taxpayers is almost $1 million annually.

According to the Department of Transportation Safety, signs that are damaged or stolen create a serious hazard that can result in injury or death to motorists. If a STOP sign is removed from an intersection, odds are in favor of a crash developing. As an example, four persons were injured when a pickup truck and an automobile collided at an intersection in Northern Virginia last fall. The sign had been removed by vandals only a few hours before the crash occurred and the drivers of both vehicles felt they had the right of way.

According to J.S. Hodge, District Engineer for the Virginia Department of Highways and Transportation in the Norfolk area, one of the biggest problems is that the maintenance people for the Highway Department are taken away from their regular assignments to replace or repair individual signs. "This is far more expensive to the taxpayer than the orderly replacement of many signs," Hodge said.

Hodge warned that stealing or damaging a traffic sign is a crime in Virginia and persons caught committing such acts will be prosecuted. Even the unlawful possession of a traffic sign is a misdemeanor, he said.

There are several ways that Virginians can help alleviate this serious traffic safety problem, Hodge said. First, parents can warn their youngsters about the safety hazard created by stolen or damaged signs. "Accurate statistics are not available," Hodge said, "but most sign vandals are believed to be in their teens or early twenties. Most youngsters who vandalize signs do not consider the safety hazard they create, and we hope to make them aware of this."

Second, persons should report missing or damaged signs as soon as they spot them. "By calling your local highway department office or police," Hodge said, "the sign can be replaced, hopefully, before a crash occurs. The longer the sign is down, the greater the chances of a crash."

And third, persons who find stolen or damaged signs can alert the Highway Department to their location or can return the signs. "Many old signs can be recycled," Hodge said, "and this can be a cost savings to taxpayers."

As part of a public information effort by the two state agencies, a film entitled "The Signs of Life" has been produced for distribution to more than 300 high school driver education programs in Virginia this fall. The film warns youngsters about the dangers of sign vandalism.

TIDEWATER COMMUNITY COLLEGE-VA. BEACH

Today College Counts

By B. William Bridges
Director of Continuing Education

The Counseling Center at the Virginia Beach campus provides a variety of services to help students attain their academic and personal goals.

The counseling process begins before the student enters TCC. Prior to registration, the student can discuss educational and career interests with a TCC counselor. At that time the student and the counselor can determine which tests may be necessary or advantages. For example, all students who will be taking English or mathematics courses are required to take placement tests to determine proficiency and to ascertain whether developmental studies would be helpful.

Diagnostic testing can be done in some academic areas when the student and the counselor agree that it might be helpful.

The Counseling Center coordinates the campus orientation program to acquaint new students with the purposes and programs of the College, the student's particular educational field, student services and faculty members. In addition to the general orientation program, the Counseling Center offers orientation seminars in special interest areas throughout the academic year. The seminars cover such topics as study skills, career exploration, job search strategies, and human potential.

Among the more recent programs established by the Counseling Center are special courses in test-taking skills, assertiveness, and support for students who are returning to school after an absence of several years. Students from many different backgrounds might benefit from the program for returning students, such as the woman who returns to school after her children are grown, the man who decides to continue his education after retirement from military service or civilian employment, or the young person who had decided to enter college after working for several years.

Each student receives personal attention at the Counseling Center, with services available to meet the student's individual needs. Whether it is a problem with a particular academic area or course, a desire to define or change career goals, or a need to simply find out more about one's self, the Counseling Center can offer each TCC student support. Students can be assured that qualified, concerned counselors will be ready to put the resources of the Counseling Center and the college to work for the student's welfare.

The programs and support available through the Counseling Center can help ease the adjustment to the demands and routines of attending college, regardless of whether the student enters TCC directly from high school or after several years' absence.

SOCIAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATION

Your number's up

By Harvey J. Ridinger, Field Representative

Supplemental security income (SSI) payments were increased, effective July, 1979 to reflect the rise in the cost-of-living over the past year.

The increase brings the basic Federal SSI payment amounts to $208.20 a month for an individual (up from $189.40) and $312.30 a month for a couple (up from $284.10).

But, now everyone who is eligible for SSI gets the full basic payment. The exact amount of a person's SSI payment depends on the person's living arrangements and how much other income he or she may have.

In determining how much income a person has for SSI purposes, not all income is counted. For example, if you have retirement or other "unearned" income — such as social security benefits, annuities, rents, or interest — $20 a month is ignored. Any unearned income over $20 is deducted from the basic SSI payment on a dollar-for-dollar basis.

If you have earnings from current work, $65 a month of it doesn't count. Then $1 is deducted from the basic SSI payment for each additional $2 of earnings. If the only income you have is earnings, $85 a month is exempted before the one-for-two rule applies.

Various other kinds of income also are not counted. They include refunds of taxes paid on real property or on food purchases; assistance by a State or local subdivision which is based on need; home-grown produce consumed by the individual and his or her family; irregular or infrequent earned income totaling $30 or less in a calendar quarter; irregular or infrequent unearned income of $60 or less in a quarter; foster care payment for a child who is not receiving SSI payments but who has been placed in the household by an approved agency; one-third of child support payments received by an eligible child from an absent parent; food stamp assistance; and housing assistance from Federal housing programs run by State and local subdivisions.

If a person is blind or disabled, income which is necessary to fulfill an approved plan to achieve self-support is not counted. The work expenses of a person who is eligible due to blindness also are excluded.

Once you start getting SSI payments, you should notify social security if there is any change in your income. Your right to SSI checks, or the amount of your checks, may be affected by changes in the amount of your other income.

An important point to remember is that income is figured on a quarterly basis for SSI purposes, even though you get SSI payments on a monthly basis. This means that a change in your income in any month of a 3-month calendar quarter can affect the payments due for each month. For example, if your income changes in the last month of the quarter, your payment for the first 2 months of the quarter could be affected.

If you are married, you also should report any changes in our wife's or husband's income.

If a child under 18 (or student under 21) is getting SSI checks, any change in the income of a parent must be reported, too.

For SSI reporting purposes, income includes anything you receive. It even includes items you do not have to report for Federal, State, or local income taxes. You must report wages you receive as an employee; net earnings from self-employment; food, shelter, clothing, and funds to help pay for them; VA compensation or VA pension and any other benefits to veterans; railroad retirement and railroad unemployment benefits; annuities, pension, workers' compensation, unemployment insurance benefits, black lung benefits; prizes, settlements, and awards; proceeds of life insurance policies; gifts and contributions in cash or otherwise; support and alimony payments; inheritances of cash or property; strike pay and other union benefits; and rents and interest.

Make moving plans carefully when it's time to relocate

More people are on the move each year. Whether a relocation is long distance or a matter of blocks, moving day can be easier and less expensive if plans are made carefully and well in advance. The Better Business Bureau offers these suggestions for saving time and money when moving.

When to move

If at all possible, avoid the peak moving months, June through September, as well as moves on the last or first week of any month, which is when leases generally expire. This will help to avoid higher seasonal costs, tight moving schedules, and the risk of delay or other "rush period" problems. When moving to a new city, try to get reliable recommendations on moving companies at the new location, and compare rates and services with reliable local companies. Selecting the right mover is vital, so be sure to deal only with reputable companies. If a move is job-related, many employers offer planning and financial help. In some cases personal moving costs may be tax deductible. It pays to find out.

Time means money

Allow the movers at least four to six weeks to properly plan and schedule a relocation. Contact two or three companies and ask a representative to visit your home and estimate the cost of the move. Many companies provide prospective customers with information booklets explaining the mover's and the consumer's responsibilities. You also may want to contact the Public Information Office, Interstate Commerce Commission, Washington, D.C. 20423, which has several publications on moving available to the public.

Be sure the mover explains any extra costs for services such as packing, unpacking, and handling special weight items, like pianos and freezer units, which may require additional labor and higher costs. All items that will be left behind or personally packed should be pointed out. Check every item before it is loaded and when it is unloaded, and review the mover's notations of scratched or damaged goods both before and after the move. If there is a disagreement, note it in writing on the mover's inventory and receipt.

No reputable company will give a firm price; moving companies submit estimates. The final cost of an interstate move will depend on the total weight moved, the time involved, and the distance. The total cost of local moves will depend on manhour time and equipment. Payment is always by cash or certified or traveler's checks. Be prepared; the final bill is often as much as 10% above the estimate. Other payment arrangements must be agreed upon in advance so have a clear understanding before moving.

Storage

If temporary storage is involved during the move, be sure the storage company is insured for any damage or loss. If long term storage is involved, be sure to understand all terms and conditions of the storage contract. Find out about the costs of taking one or two items at a time out of storage because most storage companies charge even if the consumer does the moving. It may be wise to sell unneeded items rather than storing them. Storage bills that seem small by the month can add up over a year or two and cost more than the stored goods are worth.

Before signing

Before signing any moving or storage contract, ask the Better Business Bureau for a reliability report on the company. Be sure to have enough insurance coverage to pay for damages or loss. Consumers are advised to move important papers and valuables themselves. With good planning, every consumer can make a good move.

TRT ridership increases

TRT today released a summary of operating statistics which showed that ridership increased 9.5 percent over last year to 12,713,675 passengers for the statistical reporting year April 1, 1978 thru March 31, 1979. Passenger revenue increased 3.8 percent to $3,751,945 while expenses increased only 3.0 percent to $8,657,747 resulting in a decrease in the deficit per passenger from 40 cents to 37 cents.

Condensation in new homes to be expected

By LIN J. COOPER
Director of Communications, Tidewater Builders Association

Cracks in foundations are alarming to new home owners, but most of them are of no real consequence and are easily repaired.

This week, this column looks at foundations and how they can be best maintained.

The weight of your house rests upon the foundation. The foundation consists of footing -- a large mass of concrete poured into a trench -- and the foundation wall, which rests on the footing. Foundation walls are usually made of poured concrete or masonry block.

Foundation walls are subject to a wide variety of stresses and strains. The base of the wall, being in the ground, maintains a fairly constant temperature, whereas the top portion, extending out of the ground, is subject to extreme temperature changes -- from summer heat to winter cold -- which cause concrete and other masonry to expand and contract.

Combinations of stresses and temperature variations may cause cracks to appear in your foundation walls. These cracks do not affect the strength of the structure in any way and may easily be repaired if desired.

To fill medium to large cracks:

1. Roughen the edge of the crack if it is smooth.
2. Clean out all loose particles of cement, mortar, or concrete with a wire brush or thin blade.
3. Wet the crack thoroughly.
4. Fill the crack with patching cement and allow a little extra for shrinkage. Be sure the patching mixture you buy is suitable for the job at hand.
5. Just before the filling hardens, rub it with burlap or a similar material to give it a texture similar to the wall. (Wetting a trowel before going over the patch for the last time will produce a smooth surface.)
6. Paint it to match the rest of the wall if necessary.

For large cracks, cut back the crack to form a V-shaped groove to a depth about equal to the width of the V at the surface and not less than one-half inch.

To repair small cracks, fill them with a heavy paste made by mixing dry cement base paint with a little water. Force the paste into the crack with a stiff bristly brush or putty knife. To match the existing wall finish, use a colored paint to form the paste. In lieu of cement base paint, you may use a mixture of cement and fine sand (one part cement, two parts sand) capable of passing through a 100-mesh screen) mixed with sufficient water to form a heavy paste.

For the fine or hairline cracks, work cement base paint into the crack with a short, stiff bristle brush.

Possibly the most disturbing problem to new homeowners is condensation, which is at its maximum in new homes. While not a severe problem in this area, because most new homes built in Tidewater do not have basements, condensation does occur due to the gallons of water used during the building process. This water comes out of the walls by evaporation, which consequently raises moisture content above normal. Proper ventilation will bring this normal drying-out process to its conclusion as steadily as possible.

Condensation may also be reduced by providing vents for such equipment as a clothes dryer. Some warm-air furnaces have humidifiers to bring moisture content in the air to health standards during winter months.

Some houses are equipped with exhaust fans in the kitchen, bath or utility areas. These are installed to draw off odors and excess moisture from these areas. If your house has such fans, use them for short periods of time when excessive moisture is being generated. Turn them off as soon as possible. Keep in mind that you are exhausting expensively conditioned air, either warm or cool, to the outside.

Masonry, like the other parts of your house, is not waterproof in itself. Where conditions have warranted it, your builder has damp-proofed the underground portions of your foundation to prevent the entrance of water from the surrounding ground.

Before making extensive or expensive structural repairs to correct a wet-wall condition, thoroughly check your drainage system. In many instances, repairing or adjusting downspouts or gutters will help to carry surface water away from foundation walls.

If the ground outside your home slopes toward the walls, pack and bank up soil so that water will drain away from the house, not toward it. This simple solution is often effective.

Beach farming and gardening

Summer beauties

Home canning and freezing facts to consider

Summer fruits and vegetables are welcome at mealtime all year long and millions of Americans are finding home canning and freezing good ways to stock up while fresh crops are at their peak. But the Better Business Bureau advises there are important facts to consider about home food processing before deciding what foods to "put up" for fall and winter.

Gardening vs buying
For many homemakers, a backyard garden is an important part of home canning and freezing. It offers good exercise and rewarding relaxation in addition to fresh produce, but keep in mind the labor, time, and risk involved. The most experienced gardeners can suffer crop failure, and a family's favorite produce may not be suited to the local climate or soil.

Consider too, the cost of plants, equipment, fertilizers, and sprays. Unless a person is a truly dedicated gardener it may be better in terms of time and money to buy rather than grow the foods to be canned or frozen.

What to preserve
While family food preferences are an important consideration, it is wise to know which fruits and vegetables are best suited to either canning or freezing. Keep in mind that there can be good savings in buying commercially canned or frozen foods in bulk. It may be cheaper to buy less expensive canned or frozen items and use home processing for higher cost seasonal foods.

Consider storage space as well; both freezer room and properly located shelf space for any canned foods. Foods improperly stored in freezers or on shelves can spoil, wasting time and money.

Home canning
Canning is generally considered the most economical and practical way to preserve food, but it must be done carefully and exactly as directed. In recent years there has been a large increase in botulism poisoning from home canned foods that have spoiled. Often these contaminated foods do not have a strong odor or taste to warn consumers. Therefore, be sure to have the proper processing equipment and canning jars as well as complete, clear, and up-to-date instructions. Follow all safety and sterilizing directions as well as directions for cooking home canned food before eating.

Home freezing
Freezing is one of the easiest and fastest ways to preserve foods at home and keep their natural color, flavor, and food value. But, be sure a particular food is well suited to freezing before beginning. Consider, too, the cost of maintaining and operating a freezer unit in terms of any savings in food costs. Consider buying packaged frozen foods, meat, and poultry in bulk, and "home freezing" special dishes, sauces, or entire "quick meals," prepared from favorite recipes to save time and money.

Be informed first
Before deciding on what to can or freeze, the Better Business Bureau advises

78° IS COOL.

For every degree cooler than 78° your air conditioner uses about 5% more electricity. And in the summer, when the most electricity is used, that can make a big difference.

So please, set your home air conditioner at 78° or higher, or no more than 15° cooler than the temperature outside (whichever is the higher setting.)

You can also take these two important energy management steps. First, restrict your weekday use of major appliances during the "peak load" hours of 10 A.M. to 10 P.M. Second, don't overwork your water heater. Use the dishwasher and washing machine only for full loads, and wash clothes in cool water instead of hot.

By following these tips, you'll be keeping your electric bills down, and helping us all make it through the summer without power shortages.

Your hedge against inflation

Trees, shrubs, flowers add value to your home

Austin Wilkins, president of the Virginia Beach Board of Realtors, Inc., asks: Got a growing hedge against inflation?

Capitalizing on your catalpa?

The truth is, plants, trees, shrubs and flowers can add thousands of dollars to the worth of your home.

One survey revealed a thick, weed-free lawn can add more than $1,400 to the resale value of a house in the $45,000 to $50,000 bracket. Attractive flowers, trees and shrubs would tack another $1,500 to the home's value. There's money in those trunks! A healthy tree on a city lot might bring in an added $1,500 above the usual asking price.

People are becoming more appreciative of the beauty of foliage aesthetically and psychologically, and they are willing to pay more greenbacks for the greenery.

But there is also a practical side to bushes and blossoms. Properly placed shrubs and trees can create a pocket of privacy around your home, blocking out street noises and nuisances. Plantings can also provide privacy between neighbors without fencing out the friendliness.

A tree dappling your house with shade on a hot summer day can lower the home's interior temperature 10 degrees! Trees also act as a windbreaker and home insulator on those cold winter days.

In the snowbelt, evergreens are an important and popular landscape element. They keep their crisp green appearance when other trees have turned in and browned out for the winter. One thing to keep in mind if you decide to plant evergreens: allow plenty of growing room. If you don't, you may find the trees crowding doorways or darkening windows once they mature.

Ornamental and flowering trees and shrubs are a delight to the eye. But fruit trees can be "the pits" if they shed their fruit on the lawn or driveway.

Select flowers not only for their decorative appeal and fragrance, but for their blooming schedule as well. Your garden can be colorful from the first crocus of spring until the last mum of fall if you program your petals.

As the song says: you can find happiness right in your own back yard. And at the bank when home selling time comes. Take advantage of these garden variety stakes — for your hedge against inflation!

Beach, blind & boat:

Bottom fishing improves in bay; flounder, sharks visit Wachapreague on Eastern Shore

By ED LEWIS
Virginia Beach Sun Outdoor Writer

Unseasonably cool weather has done its best to discourage the schools of bottom fish from entering the Chesapeake Bay, but this past week's hot spell may have turned things around. Although the spot and croaker are not being taken in their usual abundance for this time of the year, there was a noticeable increase this past weekend.

Emmet Bailey at Cape Charles told me that plenty of large croaker and trout are being taken at "The Cell," (nine miles north of Cape Charles) with many weighing in anywhere from 2½ to 3½ pounds. One citation even tipped the scales at 4 lbs. 1 oz. If you are looking for some larger croaker action this might be your answer.

Emmet also had some good off-shore news for me. He said that Virginia State Game Warden Mike Cason and Hank Jones of Cape Charles boated and released five white marlins while fishing around the Norfolk Canyon. Add these to the two they caught last week, and one begins to get the feeling that there's more than just luck involved.

The flounder has been just about the only saltwater fish that's been appearing in its usual abundance this season. According to April Mason they're still going strong down at the Wachapreague Marina, with catches of 60 to 100 flounder per boat. In fact, she says any of the Eastern Shore's seaside ports from Chincoteague to Oyster should yield a pretty fair catch. However, if you don't believe April, then ask Buddy Tillet of Chesapeake, who along with Tony Williams and George Beck, boated 115 flounder out of Wachapreague last Sunday.

Shark fishing has also been good out of Wachapreague. April told me that on July 9, Joe McNeal of Wachapreague caught a 273 lb. lemon shark in the vicinity of the marina. Trying it again the next day he took a 225 pounder, while — just off-shore — Kenneth Sterling was catching a 268 lb. lemon. This is extraordinary shark action so close to the shore. I'm thinking you could embellish the facts a little and make a great movie or something.

Along the Chesapeake Bay Bridge-Tunnel trout are still being taken, and the two channels are also yielding plenty of large flounder. Cecil Alexander of Chesapeake caught a 10 lb. 4 oz. citation doormat at the Baltimore channel. Meanwhile, between the last island and the span, tautogids are plentiful; at the southern end around the first island, spot and croaker are increasing in size and number.

In the area between Thimble Shoal Light and the Hampton Roads Tunnel drift fishermen are noticing the increase in the spot and croaker. Just southeast of there — around Harrison's pier — spot and croaker are also being taken, with one citation spot (1 lb., 4 oz.) reported by William Prichard of Norfolk.

Even with the increase in spot and croaker around the piers, I think crabs will still be number one for a while. Jamie Abelson at the Lynnhaven pier said that there's enough crabs for everyone (and enough spot and croaker if you have the time to wait for them). He said also that after dark the lights seem to be attracting the fish, and that anglers are having their best luck once the sun goes down.

Off shore from Virginia Beach, the marlin are starting to dominate the action with a few dolphin also making an appearance. On Saturday the "Gannet" and the "High Hope" each had three marlin, while the "Fair Sea" claimed four. These boats are out of the Virginia Beach Sports Fishing Center at Rudee Inlet, and each released all but one of their catch. Also, last week Clifton Henning of Virginia Beach caught a 168 lb. citation tuna while fishing with Capt. Mike Romeo on the "Gannet."

Down at Nags Head things are still slow. I went down Friday and had very little luck. It was like I reported last week, the water is just too clear. You could wade out ten feet from shore and it was crystal clear. Mike at Tatum's Boat and Tackle said that about the only thing being taken are the sheepshead from beneath the Oregon Inlet bridge. Anglers fishing off the bridge seem to be having the best luck, but it can be a real trick getting an eight to ten pound sheepshead up and onto the catwalk.

Bass fishermen are still doing well in Currituck Sound, Back Bay, and in the Northwest River. On Saturday and Sunday, Chief R.A. Lakoski of the Chesapeake Police Dept. and his wife, Barbara caught their limit of bass while fishing the Currituck Sound around Church Island. One of the bass weighed-in at 6 lbs. 9 oz. (which is a real fine fish). In that same vicinity and on that same day, Danny McCoy of Chesapeake boated six bass and twenty-five white perch.

At the Northwest River Campgrounds the action is still pretty steady. Rev. Carter, whom I've mentioned time and time again, caught nine bass and four pike. He released the pike (which weighed approximately two pounds apiece) and five of the bass. Also at the campgrounds: Cecil Calpepper of Chesapeake caught 16 bream and two bass; Thomas Bone caught 50 bream; and Paul Olah and Bill Clark caught 40 bream in a combined effort.

Probably the most unusual near-catch this week was reported by Tom Kilmary of Virginia Beach. Tom was fishing out of the Northwest River Campgrounds and had landed 40 bream using a fly rod. Having just caught a bream while casting to the left of this particular cypress stump, he decided to try the right side, and when he did something his fly rod so hard that it broke his rod. At first he thought he had a nice bass, but he soon recognized the predator was a large cottonmouth water moccasin. The monster broke Tom's line before it swam away. I guess it was just in a bad mood that day.

A congratulations goes out to Dale Smith of Chesapeake. Debbie at Robbie's Bait and Tackle told me that Dale, who is thirteen years of age, went bass fishing for the first time down at Back Bay in Virginia Beach. Dale's first fish on his first bass fishing trip turned out to be his first citation. He caught the eight pound, three ounce bass and then spent the rest of the day smirking at everyone else.

This past week a 23 foot fishing boat burned to the water line just off of Hospital Point in the Elizabeth River. Each year we usually have several such instances in the Tidewater area, and some of them are preventable. Gas engines in a boat that has a closed bilge can easily become a bomb. If a leaking gas line or tank should lead even a small amount of gas into a closed unvented bilge, an explosion could occur when the engine is started.

Remember, always remove the engine cover or hatch when fueling or starting the engine. You should use your blower if your boat is equipped with one. Have your fire extinguisher where you can easily reach it. If you're not sure about the way your boat is ventilated, or whether you have sufficient (approved) safety equipment aboard, call your local Coast Guard Auxiliary representative for a free safety inspection.

Boaters need special insurance coverages

Catamaran or cruiser, catboat or ketch, boats of all types have unusual insurance needs. Boat owners and renters should check their insurance coverages before taking to the water, the Insurance Information Institute advises.

Larger and more powerful boats require special insurance covering property damage and liability through yacht policies. But even smaller power boats, fishing boats or daysailers may need extra insurance coverages.

Don't count on your homeowners insurance policy to cover all property loss, the Institute says. Theft and physical damage coverage for a boat, its equipment, accessories, outboard motor or trailer is limited to $500. And usually there is no coverage against windstorm or hail unless the boat is stored inside a fully-enclosed structure. Theft of personal articles is covered only if there is forced entry into a secured cabin, compartment or locker.

Inland marine and yacht policies are available to cover virtually all damage and theft losses on and off the water. There are deductibles and some exclusions — such as war risk, wear and tear, power boat racing and damage from ice or freezing.

If you have a sailboat shorter than 26 feet, a power boat with an inboard or inboard/outboard engine under 50 horsepower or outboard motors under 25 total horsepower, your homeowners insurance covers your liability for injuries to others and their medical expenses up to the limits of the policy. However, damage you do to someone else's property is not covered. If your boat does not meet these size and power tests, you need the financial protection of inland marine or yacht insurance.

There are four basic coverages in pleasure boat insurance policies, the Insurance Information Institute says. They are: (1) hull insurance, which provides physical damage protection on the boat and its equipment and a limited form of property damage liability protection; (2) protection and indemnity insurance, covering bodily injury — with limits for waterskiing accidents — and property damage liability; (3) compensation for people you pay to maintain or operate your boat, and (4) medical payments coverage similar to medical payments insurance under homeowners policies.

There is no standard boat insurance policy. The size and type of craft, where and when it will be used, coverage options and limitations determine how a policy should be designed. Check with an experienced marine insurance agent or company to be sure you have the right one.

Fall those boatsnappers
The Insurance Information Institute also warns that thefts of boats and their gear are on the rise. Losses are estimated in the tens of millions of dollars annually. A few simple precautions can save a boat-owner's investment and summer. Here are some tips:

— Stow all loose gear — such as life preservers, anchors, boat hooks and fire extinguishers — in a strong locker equipped with a good lock.

— Never leave expensive electronic gear on board when you are away from the boat. Install it on slide-out brackets so you can take it with you and lock it up.

— Secure your boat and trailer at home or when you stop on the road. A thief with a hitch could haul your boat away in minutes.

— Chain and lock your boat to the hoist or dock. Be sure the chain or cable is care-hardened and of good quality.

— Remove the battery and fuel tanks from outboards and inboard/outboard when you have finished boating.

— If you have a large boat with a dock dinghy, secure the dinghy to a deck fitting or the davits.

— Consider a good burglar alarm system for cruisers or large sailboats.

— Record and keep safely on shore the identification numbers of the boat and motor and the serial numbers of electronic gear and other valuable equipment.

Bass fishermen describe perfect fishing day

Except bass fishermen. They're the exception.

They don't like the sun or blue skies, and the weather is best when it's almost storming.

There's a good explanation for this according to fishing experts, who point out that bass react to the amount of light penetrating the water and go to deep water on bright, sunny days.

They want to be hidden, and they aren't likely to feed actively until the sun goes down.

What makes a perfect fishing day, then, for bass fishermen?

This further prevents light from entering the water.

Water temperature is important. Best is between 65 and 75 degrees.

Finally, bass fishing specialists like the water to be slightly off-color, milky or light green.

Given these conditions, bass will stay in shallow water, be active feeders, and can be approached by anglers without much danger of spooking them to deep water.

Upright flotation aids swamped boaters

Since materials such as fiberglass and aluminum are heavier than water, boats made of them require some form of lightweight flotation.

For a long time it was common to use foam-in-place flotation below the floors of many small boats.

The two chemicals used tended to foam and expand when mixed together.

It was possible to fill irregular spaces quickly and thoroughly with such foam.

But, with all the foam under the flooring, when rough going filled the cockpit with water the upward push of the foam often tended to make such boats roll over, leaving occupants with nothing but smooth, slippery bottoms to cling to.

Called "upright flotation," it keeps a swamped boat floating in the upright position, with enough buoyancy to

Ordinance governing horses under review by city

The Virginia Beach Planning Commission is being asked to review the city ordinance regulating riding academies, boarding stables and horse rentals.

Discussion of a petition for a boarding stable and horse or hire operation Monday afternoon uncovered confusion and inadequacies in the ordinance.

At the suggestion of Councilman Donald Merrick, City Council Monday asked the Planning Commission to consider rewriting the section, clarifying the definitions of riding academy, and horses for hire and to consider limiting the number of horses per acre. Under the present ordinance five horses per acre are permitted for an academy, but there is no limit for a horse-for-hire operation. Also, a stable in an academy has to be 100 feet from the property line while in a horse for hire situation, it can be only 50 feet from the property line.

Councilman J. Curtis Payne Jr. said that five horses per acre were too many for any operation.

In the case in question, council approved by a vote of 7-4 the application of George Dragas Jr. for a conditional use permit for boarding horses and horses for hire on a 25-acre parcel on the north side of Landstown Road, east of Salem Road, Princess Anne Borough.

Voting against the petition were Councilmen John A. Baum and Merrick and Councilwomen Barbara Henley and Meyera Oberndorf.

Dragas had originally applied for a permit for a riding academy but on recommendation of the Planning Commission dropped that application.

Attorney James Pickrell said that the only opposition came from the adjoining property owner.

Attorney Grover Wright, representing Col. and Mr. Ralph Melanga who live next door, said the barn was less than 100 feet from the Melanga property and that there was no limit to the number of horses Dragas could have.

Evaluate your summer makeup routine and simplify it as much as possible. Sheer makeup foundation and eye pencils may become your basics in July and August. Eye pencils have less oil in their formulations than cream-based eye shadows, can be smudged and blended to give just a hint of color.

Avoid carrying a lot of cream-based lipsticks and other cream-based beauty products in hot weather since they can change their consistency. A lip pencil and compact of clear lip gloss can be combined to define, color and give a bit of shine to your lips.

Take a 10-minute cooling down break when you find yourself getting overheated and frazzled. Slip off your shoes, sip some cool water or lemonade, contemplate the coldest things you can imagine. Images of bathing in a waterfall or sitting on an iceberg can make you forget, at least for a little while, that the sidewalks are sizzling.

Hot water dispenser cuts electricity use

New studies are proving that the kitchen hot water dispenser uses about 80 percent less electricity than heating a tea kettle on an electric range.

Studies at the Iowa State University Laboratory show that, when used as an aid for cooking and for the preparation of all instant foods, the hot water dispenser is an energy saver when compared to the use of a tea kettle for boiling water.

The hot water dispenser is a special hot water system that conveniently provides 190-degree water instantly, at the twist of a tap.

INSTALLED at the kitchen sink, the bathroom sink, the wet bar or the office coffee bar, the dispenser will produce up to 60 cups of steaming hot water per hour.

According to the In-Sink-Erator Division of Emerson Electric Co., Racine, Wis., a leading manufacturer of dispensers, the product is ideal for making instant beverages, soups or cereals; for thawing frozen foods; warming baby bottles or preparing such things as gelatins, gravies and puddings.

Moreover, the dispenser's uses are not limited to food. It can be used for such things as heating tight bottle lids to loosen them and defrosting the refrigerator.

THE AVERAGE daily usage of the dispenser is about 10 eight-ounce cups. Setting the cost of electricity at a typical 4 cents per kilowatt hour, the total daily energy cost for the dispenser would be 2.92 cents. The same number of cups of water, if heated electrically on a range, would cost the user 5.26 cents per day, or 80 percent more than with the hot water dispenser.

Furthermore, the hot water dispenser saves water, since all the water that is heated is used, according to In-Sink-Erator.

The entire dispenser unit, which weighs only nine pounds, consists of a high-quality chrome faucet and a 1/2-gallon tank assembly. The tank is installed beneath the sink, while the faucet is generally located next to the regular fittings.

THE UNIT features a unique design that heats water without putting it under pressure.

There's a growing trend among professional plumbers toward providing home owners with polybutylene plumbing systems.

One major advantage is the resistance of these systems to the damaging effects of corrosive potable water. For this reason, a polybutylene system was installed in an 8,000-square-foot, $1.7-million new home in Annapolis Hills, Cal., an area where water is so corrosive it often destroys brass, copper, and galvanized plumbing systems in as little as one year.

Advice from the Veterans Administration

Q -- My husband died on September 8, 1978. I would like to install a marker of my own instead of one supplied by VA. I have been told there has been a change in the law and that I might receive an allowance to apply to the cost of a stone I purchase. Is this true?

A -- To be eligible for the marker allowance, burial must have taken place on or after October 18, 1978, the effective date of the law. The VA will pay up to $50.00 toward the cost of a marker.

Q -- I obtained a VA guaranteed home loan in 1973 and sold the home on an assumption contract in 1977. The buyer still owns the home and is paying on the original VA guaranteed mortgage. Can I get another VA guaranteed loan now?

A -- Possibly. Since 1973 the maximum VA loan guaranty entitlement has been increased to $25,000 from $12,500. Although the entitlement you used in 1973 is still committed on your prior loan, you can use part of your increased entitlement to purchase a new home under the VA program if you can locate a lender willing to make a loan with that amount of entitlement.

Treasure Shop presents check for NAS Oceana projects

Two checks, each for $100, were presented for worthwhile projects at Nacal Air Station Oceana in Virginia Beach recently.

Captain D.J. Michaels, NAS Oceana's

athletic program involving young dependents of personnel assigned to NAS Oceana. Mrs. Sally Warwick, new chairman of the Treasure Shop at Naval Station Norfolk, presented the other $100 check to Jim Lytle, NAS Oceana special services director for the air station's nursery.

Captain D.J. Michaels, NAS Oceana's

Commanding Officer, and Radioman Chief (RMC) Michael Mallicote, assistant director of NAS Oceana's Civic League Youth Program, were on hand for the check presentations.

The Treasure Shop is operated and staffed by Navy wives from various Navy wives clubs in the Tidewater area. From January 1978 to May 1979, the Treasure Shop gave away $2,800 to worthwhile charitable projects.

The Treasure Shop accepts antiques, china, jewelry, linens, toys, games, arts, crafts and other items for resale and charges the individual wishing to sell his wares through this shop a consignment fee of 20 percent. All funds from the Treasure Shop go to charitable causes.

Closed temporarily for the summer, the Treasure Shop will reopen early September 1979. It's located at Naval Station Norfolk in Building E-13, directly behind the Garden Shop and, when open for business, operates Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays from 10 a.m.-2 p.m.

The Treasure Shop's phone number is 423-0790. Volunteers will be needed to work in the shop this fall and may call Mrs. Lynn Richardson at 423-5143, if interested.

Mrs. R.P. Caudill (left), outgoing chairman of the Treasure Shop, Naval Air Station Norfolk, holds a certificate of appreciation for the $100 check she just presented to Mrs. Melanie Herr and which Mrs. Herr holds. Mrs. Herr is president of the Naval Air Station Oceana Civic League and she received the check on behalf of her organization for the civic league's athletic program.

Fraternal order supports work of library's special services

The Virginia Beach Bayside Branch Library received a check for $100 last week from the Fraternal Order of Eagles — Ladies Auxiliary, Virginia Beach #3204, as a gesture of support to the library for its services to the elderly. Presenting the gift to the library's Special Services Director Marilyn Mortensen were Auxiliary Past Madam President Gloria Sethman, and Golden Eagle Fund Co-chairmen Clara Hughes and Louise Goldman.

This is the fifth year such a presentation will be duplicated across the United States and Canada by Eagle Auxiliaries. Libraries receiving these grants will be asked to purchase large print books and magazines for the elderly and visually handicapped.

The gift serves to call attention to the ongoing work of the Special Services Department of the Virginia Beach Public Library System, which circulates over 3,000 books a month to the visually and physically handicapped. The department is the Subregional Library for the Blind and Physically Handicapped for the entire Tidewater area and as such serves patrons in Virginia Beach, Norfolk, Portsmouth, Chesapeake, the Eastern Shore, Suffolk, Franklin, Smithfield and surrounding counties.

The library's certified readers range in age from three to 102, according to Mrs. Mortensen. Readers become "certified" by filling out an application and having it signed by a competent authority to declare cases of blindness, visual disability or physical limitations. The procedure is necessary because the program is supported by federal tax money and all equipment, books and magazines are lent and maintained free of charge. Also, persons who use the mail order service can receive and return their materials postage free.

"Although we are happy to have walk-in patrons, most are serviced by mail," says Mrs. Mortensen. The department maintains a mailing list of 1200 individuals and operates 56 deposit collections in locations such as hospitals and nursing homes.

Deaf persons may call in to the library through its teletype service. The department also accepts collect phone calls from anyone in the Tidewater or Eastern Shore area who has a certifiable physical or visual handicap at (804) 464-9175.

Items which certified readers may borrow from the library include talking book machines (specially designed phonographs for use in playing library recordings), cassette players, talking books (disc recordings of books and magazines), cassette tapes and various large print selections. Among the 22,000 titles available to these readers are classics, the Bible, best sellers and a number of popular magazines.

Additional special equipment available to patrons on request includes magnifiers, pillow speakers for persons confined to beds, headphones, tone arm clips and braille erasers and signature guides.

In addition to talking books, the Special Services Department maintains a large braille library.

"Braille volumes cause a bit of a storage problem," explains Mrs. Mortensen. "The World Book Encyclopedia printed in braille takes up a whole room. The braille version of 'Gone With the Wind' is 13 volumes long."

"Twin vision books" available through the library tell children's stories both in print and in braille. The design enables a parent to read a story to a blind child while the child follows the words printed in braille.

An IBM electric braille typewriter, a braille copy machine and braille income tax forms are all among the aids available to the blind at the library. But one of the most sophisticated pieces of equipment there is the Kurzweil Reading Machine.

The Kurzweil Reading Machine literally reads aloud any printed material placed in it. Its "memory" can also record any printed material it has read. The Special Services Department at the Bayside branch library is a test site for the machine. There are only about 60 such machines in the United States, according to Mrs. Mortensen. The model at Bayside cost about $50,000. With further refinements, its makers hope to eventually design a portable model that will run about $5,000.

Of the Special Services Department's six full-time employees, two are blind. The department is also staffed by a group of active volunteers. Courses in braille and sign language are in the future plans of the library. "And eventually we'd like to be able to make our own recordings," says Mrs. Mortensen.

Volunteers desiring to help the department, and visually and physically handicapped persons wanting to become patrons of the library can obtain further information by calling 464-9175.

Defective vehicle equipment should be repaired promptly

The Department of State Police is urging motorists to have defective vehicle equipment repaired or replaced as promptly as possible.

"It's actually against the law to operate a vehicle with defective equipment," says a Department spokesman. "However, a lot of people will wait until time to have their vehicle given a semi-annual inspection to have repairs made."

And, according to State Police, this is where the problem is. Not only are motorists endangering their lives and the lives of others by driving with defective equipment, but it is becoming increasingly difficult to have the problem corrected within a specific time.

A "rejection" sticker is good for seven days, not including the day the vehicle is first inspected. This means that it is unlawful to operate the vehicle anytime after that unless the defective equipment has been repaired or replaced and the owner issued a valid inspection sticker.

"What is happening," notes the department spokesman, "is that motorists are finding out that a defective part must be ordered, or even backordered, and simply is not available as quick as they would like to have it.

Also, there is no provision in state law to extend this seven-day 'grace' period to have the problem corrected."

State Police emphasize that the prompt repair or replacement of defective equipment applies to all equipment; however, among the most frequently cited problems is the replacement of light lenses.

Often, particularly if the vehicle is a foreign model, the lens must be ordered if not in stock.

This ordering period for parts extends to other equipment components.

The problem is not limited to foreign-made vehicles reports the department, but also involves many American-made products. "It used to be," says spokesman, "that an owner could find a replacement light lens for an older car at a junkyard, but not anymore. It seems that the lenses are getting crushed in accidents and simply are not available."

Primarily what motorists have to realize, according to State Police, is that it is a violation of the law to operate a vehicle with defective equipment. Therefore, there should be no delay in having problems corrected immediately.

An owner who attempts to overlook the problem until time for a semi-annual inspection may manage to avoid being cited for a violation by an officer of the law, but he could well find himself without transportation should he receive a rejection sticker and not be able to have the problem corrected within seven days.

Most critical is the dangerous situation that driving a vehicle with defective equipment creates for both the owner and fellow motorists.

Zoning changes intended to preserve agricultural land

Virginia Beach City Council last week adopted zoning changes which are intended to preserve agricultural land and to regulate large-scale residential development in agricultural areas.

The existing AF-1 Agricultural District was amended so that one-family detached dwellings will no longer be a principal use, but a conditional use.

A new classification, AG-2, Agricultural District was created which allows one-family detached dwellings as a principal use.

All property within 600 feet of a street currently zoned AG-1 Agricultural District will eventually be rezoned to AG-2.

Zoning changes are not effective with the amendments but will be made later.

Eliminated, however, will be land Management Dwelling Groups approved by council in February of 1979. Land management criteria, used in areas consisting of poorly-drained soil, will continue to be applied by the Health Department, however.

A Planning Commission sub-committee recommended the changes to halt the proliferation of large subdivisions on agricultural property.

Hanbury said that one danger in the changes is that if the land-owner is not careful he will land-lock himself.

Linda Midgett is one of the Special Services Department's two blind staff members. Here she gives a demonstration of the Kurzweil Reading Machine.

Sunstream Park rezoning deferred

A request to rezone 207.3 acres in Sunstream Park as a Planned Development has been deferred to allow the Planning Commission the opportunity to review the ordinance with a view toward requiring a minimum of three rather than four housing types in the complex.

Sunstream Park, Inc. applied for the change from R-8 Residential District, and AG-1 Agricultural District to PD-H Planned Development Housing district on property on the east side of Salem Road north of Elbow Road, Kempville and Princess Anne Boroughs.

Under the present zoning ordinance four housing types are required including single-family homes, which have to make up 45 percent of the development, apartments, townhouses and duplexes.

The Sunstream Plan shows the first three types but developers were willing to include a fourth. The administration, however, recommended that the ordinance be changed to require three types of housing.

Archives of the pioneer Youel family of Virginia, which are being established at the Washington and Lee University Library at Lexington, Va., will be formally dedicated at a luncheon at the library on Saturday, July 28. The dedication will be the principal event of a Youel family reunion to be attended by Youel family descendants from various parts of the United States, including Virginia Beach.

The collection of material for the repository is expected to add new information to the history of Rockbridge County, where Youels have resided since 1771. The arrangement for the archives was made with Maurice D. Leach Jr., University Librarian, by officers of the Youel family organization to safeguard the information now in the possession of various members of the family, to make it generally available, and to encourage new research on the part of the younger generation.

"Families are taking a new interest in searching for their 'roots'," said Rice M. Youel Jr. of Virginia Beach, who is president of Youel Care, Inc., the Youel family organization. "In our family we are fortunate to have records going back to William and Elizabeth Nelson Youel, our ancestors who came to Virginia from Scotland before the Revolutionary War. We think it is important for these records to be centrally housed in a safe place where they can be inspected and studied by family members and historians."

"The University Library is very pleased to receive the Youel Archives," said Leach. "They will add considerable substance to a growing collection of Rockbridge County and Valley of Virginia resources, which are in constant demand by historians interested in the Great Wagon Road and its role in the emergence of the West. Today we are fortunate in our new facility to be able to encourage the gift of valuable family papers for the use of all interested in their heritage."

Leach will represent the University Library at the dedication luncheon and Dr. Irwin Taylor Sanders III, the University Historian, will be the principal speaker. Others participating will be Richard R. Fletcher, president of the Rockbridge Historical Society, and Youel organization officers: Captain Rice M. Youel, Jr., president; Kenneth Youel, vice president; Mrs. Rice M. Youel, treasurer and editor of the family publication, the Youel Log; and Mrs. Naomi Nielsen of Lyons, Kansas, the family historian and genealogist. W. Harry Ewald of Buena Vista, Va., is in charge of local arrangements.

The archives will contain the biographies of many prominent Youel descendants including Major Rice Youell, V.M.I. graduate and former head of the Virginia penal system; James Cameron Allen, Illinois statesman who was mentioned for President in 1860; and Richard Dudley Obenshain, who was nominated for United States Senator from Virginia prior to his untimely death.

U.S. Census Bureau recruits temporary employees at Beach

The U.S. Census Bureau has a number of temporary jobs open during the next few weeks in Virginia Beach and Chesapeake to help prepare address lists for use during the 1980 census.

Temporary census workers usually will work three to four weeks each and will be paid on a per-address collected basis. For an eight-hour day, the average worker will earn $27 to $30 per day plus 18½ cents-per-mile for any driving done in a private vehicle. Applicants for the jobs must be 18 years old or over, a U.S. citizen, and pass a written test.

The work involves driving or walking to compile lists of addresses of each dwelling unit in designated areas of the county. These address lists will play a vital role in taking the 1980 census. They will be used to produce mailing labels for the census questionnaires to be sent to each household in America on March 28, 1980. Then, a few weeks following the April 1 Census Day, census officials will use the address lists to determine which households have not returned their completed questionnaires. Census takers must then be sent to each non-responding household to collect the information required on the census form.

The 1979 address collection activity in the county is part of a Census Bureau program involving 35,000 temporary workers nationwide to compile lists containing approximately 30 million addresses. Another 50 million addresses have been purchased from commercial mailing list companies.

The Census Bureau is an equal opportunity employer. County residents interested in applying for the temporary census job should contact: U.S. Census Prelist Office, 2819 Parham Road, first floor, Richmond, Virginia 23229; telephone, (804)782-2607.

Faircloth

Maj. Harry L. Faircloth, son of Mr. and Mrs. C.C. Faircloth, Ocean View Ave., Virginia Beach, recently completed the U.S. Army Command and General Staff College Regular Course at Fort Leavenworth, Kan.

The 10-month regular course at the Army's senior tactical school is designed to produce graduates who are competent military problem solvers. Emphasis is on career development for the officer's future duties as a senior commander or staff officer.

This year's graduating class included 763 U.S. and 97 allied officers. The 97 allied graduates represented 50 countries, military doctrine.

AKI Douglas J. Plude (r) NAS Oceana's Sailor of the Quarter, accepts congratulations from Captain Denny J. Michaels, NAS Oceana's Commanding Officer.

First woman executive officer assigned to FACSAC VACAPES

When Lieutenant Commander Susan B. Hill relieved Commander J.W. Wagner as Executive Officer of Fleet Area Control and Surveillance Facility, Virginia Capes (FACSAC VACAPES) at Naval Air Station Oceana in Virginia Beach on July 1, she became the facility's first woman Executive Officer (XO).

Responsible for scheduling and controlling fleet and force training facilities and activities in the Virginia Capes off-shore fleet operating areas, FACSAC has existed as a command at NAS Oceana since October 1, 1977.

Prior to reporting to Oceana on June 4, Lt. Cmdr. Hill attended George Mason University at Fairfax, Virginia, where she earned a master's degree in educational administration. As her first educational milestone, Lt. Cmdr. Hill received a Bachelor of Arts degree in English from the University of Delaware in June 1964.

Entering the Navy in June 1965, Lt. Cmdr. Hill attended Officers Candidate School (OCS) at Newport, Rhode Island and was commissioned as an Ensign in August 1965. She has had three tours of duty at the Bureau of Naval Personnel (BUPERS) in Washington, D.C. and a total of four tours of duty in Washington, D.C.

Lieutenant Commander Hill was one of the Navy's first woman officers to receive orders to a fighter squadron — VF-124 based at Naval Air Station Miramar, San Diego, California. Another challenging tour, highlighting her 14 year Naval career, was with the Navy Space Systems Command at Los Angeles, California. One of her assignments at BUPERS was as officer in charge of career development for women officers.

Not only is the new FACSAC VACAPES XO excited about her new position, but she also plans to stay as an integral part of the "Navy team" for several more years.

Douglas J. Plude is Sailor of the Quarter

Aviation Storekeeper First Class (AKI) Douglas J. Plude has been chosen the Naval Air Station (NAS) Oceana Sailor of the Quarter for July, August and September, 1979. When his leading chief, Aviation Storekeeper Senior Chief (AKCS) James Boyd from Supply Department broke the news, AKI Plude remarked, "I was really surprised — in fact, I almost didn't believe him."

A letter of recognition, signed by Captain D.J. Michaels, NAS Oceana Commanding Officer, cites AKI Plude's performance and leadership ability which contribute to Oceana's maintaining the best aviation supply support of any level-two air station in the Navy. In addition to Plude's "superior military and professional performance," his involvement in community activities was cited as a reason for his Sailor of the Quarter selection. He is Vice-President of the NAS Oceana Navy Housing Civic League and an active member of Scott Memorial Methodist Church.

Petty Officer Plude lives in Virginia Beach with his wife, Nancy, and their two sons, Daryl, seven and Denver, who is four years old. Enjoying his job, the people he works with, and the Navy in general, AKI Plude plans to make the Navy his career.

As part of the awards earned by the Sailor of the Quarter, AKI Plude along with his wife and two children, dined with Captain Michaels in the Enlisted Dining Facility. Prior to the steak luncheon, Captain Michaels presented Petty Officer Plude with a letter recognizing his accomplishments.

In addition to clinching the Sailor of the Quarter title and a luncheon as Captain Michael's guest, AKI Plude received two tickets for a complementary harbor cruise aboard the "Spirit of Norfolk," a $25 U.S. Savings Bond from the Bank of Virginia Beach, eligibility for nomination as Sailor of the Year, and has his picture displayed on the quarterdeck in the administration buildings.

Advice from the Veterans Administration

Q — An acquaintance was notified by VA that he is eligible for service-disabled insurance. Can I get it too?

A — Veterans separated from the service on or after April 25, 1951, who have been granted a service connected disability of 10% or more for which compensation would be payable, are eligible if they are otherwise in good health. Disabled veterans must file for this insurance within one year from the date the VA notifies them of their service connected disability.

Q — My father was an honorably discharged war time veteran. When he died a year ago, we were not aware of his eligibility for burial benefits. Can we still apply for those benefits?

A — A claim for burial benefits must be filed within two years following a veteran's permanent burial or cremation. Contact your nearest VA regional office for assistance.

Q — My deceased husband was a veteran, and I was in the Army too. Why can't I get a pension as his survivor and also as a veteran in my own right?

A — Payment of pension to the same person as a veteran and surviving spouse is prohibited under Public Law 95-588.

How to cut back rising food bills

As prices continue on an upward spiral, it's important to remember that you are not completely helpless against the rising tide of food prices. Economy-minded consumers can help themselves to eat better for less.

Most consumers know some of the ways listed below to cut food costs but not all consumers are skillful shoppers or even recognize that it is possible to save money in the market place.

If you are a concerned shopper, concerned not only with food cost but also nutrition and food quality, why not try the following suggestions:

1. Plan one meatless day a week. Meatless does not mean proteinless. Substitute eggs, cheese and whole grains for animal protein sources.

2. Extend meat with cereal and pasta products.

3. Waste less. In 1977, for example, the residents of one southern state emptied $3,881,790 worth of food into the garbage can. Too much food is wasted at home and in restaurants.

4. Purchase fewer convenience foods. Although it may take more time to prepare a meal, it's worth it in added nutrition.

5. Plan menus for at least one week in advance before making a list or going shopping.

6. Compare the unit prices of a food item in pounds, grams, ounces, dozens or packages.

7. Eliminate monthly food needs. Buy food for 2 weeks at a time to decrease driving and save valuable time for other activities.

8. Prepare large quantities of spaghetti sauce, chili, stews and pastry. Label and freeze for later use.

9. Cultivate a taste for less expensive foods and beverages.

10. Entertain with "pot luck" and inexpensive buffets (lasagna and salad for example).

Decorating, sewing classes offered

Is your favorite lamp in need of a new cover? The Virginia Beach Department of Agriculture/Cooperative Extension Service will give a demonstration on making, cleaning and caring for decorative lamp shades on July 26 from 10 a.m. to noon in the Agriculture Building conference room, located at the Municipal Complex on Princess Anne Road. Call 427-4511 for more information.

The department will also offer an adult sewing class, designed for the beginner with emphasis on individual instruction, beginning August 3. There will be eight lessons. Classes will run from 9 a.m. to noon. Register for more information. Call 427-4511.

Dietary deficiencies avoided with properly balanced diet

Manager of Veterinary Services, Norton Laboratories

Many pet foods are advertised as complete foods or balanced diets for cats or dogs, and they probably fill the nutritional needs of most household pets. However, some pets have special dietary needs; young animals, those recovering from an illness, pregnant pets and some others have nutritional requirements that differ from the healthy adult.

Your veterinarian is the best person to consult about your pet's diet. He or she can determine whether the food you feed your pet provides balanced nutrition, or requires additional supplementation.

A properly balanced pet diet should provide about a dozen basic vitamins. If one or more of these essential vitamins is missing, the pet could be in poor condition, and may lack energy. Certain medical problems may also develop, depending upon the specific vitamin deficiency.

Eye infections and reproductive problems occur when pets are fed foods low in vitamin A. Cats may also show a serious weight loss, with some weakness in the hind legs. Pet foods that are improperly stored or rancid can quickly lose their vitamin A content.

Vitamin D, in combination with calcium and phosphorus, is necessary for proper bone development. It may be lacking in kittens and puppies born during the winter who are kept in dimly lit quarters. Vitamin D-deficient pets will develop bowed legs and weak bones.

The term "vitamin B" describes a group or complex of related compounds, rather than a single chemical. The primary signs of vitamin B deficiency include lack of appetite, anemia and various nervous disorders. Most vitamin B supplements generally contain a blend of the major vitamin B factors.

Cats are more susceptible to vitamin E deficiencies than dogs. Felines develop a condition called steatitis or "yellow fat disease" in which the fatty areas of the cat's body become inflamed. The cat then loses its appetite and becomes sensitive to touch or pressure. Much of the vitamin E in a normal feline diet can be destroyed by the unsaturated fatty acids contained in fish oil. If your cat prefers a diet with high levels of fish, it might need a vitamin E supplement.

Scientists have discovered other indications of vitamin and mineral deficiencies in pets. Convulsions, prolonged bleeding, stomach disorders, even temporary paralysis can result from a poor diet.

Although there are quite a number of pet vitamins available, you need to be selective in choosing one for your pet. Cats have somewhat different needs than dogs and should receive dietary supplements designed especially for feline use.

The National Research Council, a private, non-profit organization of scientists, has established recommended levels of vitamins for good canine and feline nutrition. This information is readily available to your veterinarian. He or she can evaluate your pet's current diet against the model recommended for proper pet health.

If your pet's diet meets or slightly exceeds the standards established by the NRC, you can be assured it is receiving the nutrients necessary for a healthy life. Generally, dog and cat food manufacturers produce quality products that prevent most dietary deficiencies. Veterinarians see dietary deficiencies that are usually caused by nutritional excesses and imbalances.

Oilmen say 'fourables' top 'thribbles' every time

In today's complex world, every business has its own terminology. The oil business is no exception, and the language of the modern oilman is particularly colorful. It is not that so many of the words themselves are uncommon, but the meanings they have taken on in the oilfields give an interesting flavor to the oilman's speech. Aminol USA, Inc., a subsidiary of R.J. Reynolds Industries, Inc., offers the following listing of some of the more colorful terms.

CHRISTMAS TREE.

Saint Nick doesn't recognize this variety. It is the assembly of fittings and valves that caps a completed well. It controls the flow of oil from the well to storage tanks or pipelines.

FIREFLOODING. Although it sounds like a contradiction in terms, it refers to another way to increase production of heavy oil. Oil deep underground is ignited and fed large amounts of air. This heats and thins nearby oil and provides pressure to move it to producing wells.

LIGHT ENDS. Not what weight watchers hope to achieve after dining. They are the more volatile products of petroleum refining, such as gasoline, propane and butane.

HOT FOOTING. The application of heat to the lower extremities...of a well. Involves installing a heater at the bottom of an input well to thin heavy crude oil and increase its flow to nearby producing wells.

CRUDE. An individual who is crude is often said to be unrefined. In the oil industry, crude refers to oil that is unrefined. It is oil just as it comes out of the well.

JOINT. It is not a funny cigarette. It is a section or length of steel pipe or casing from 20 to 30 feet long. Joints are added one at a time to drive the rotating drill bit into the earth. The string of pipe is pulled up out of the hole in sections of two, three or four joints.

ROUND TRIP. Describes the voyage of a drill bit when it becomes dull and has to be changed. It is painstakingly pulled up out of the hole—2, 3 or 4 joints at a time—changed and returned to the bottom. A round trip can take more than 24 hours for very deep wells.

SPUD. No relation to the starchy tuber for which Idaho is famous. To spud a well is to begin drilling.

STRIPPER. Of course it's not an ecdysiast. A stripper well pumps (or "strips") oil from a reservoir. The standard definition of a stripper is one that produces less than 10 barrels of oil per day. With average daily production for the 500,000 oil wells in the United States at 16 barrels of crude per day, we have many strippers. By contrast, in the Midwest, the average well produces 5,500 barrels per day.

WILDCAT. When is a wildcat not a wildcat? When it is an exploratory well drilled in an area where there has been no previous oil production. About one wildcat well in 48 finds commercial deposits of oil or gas. At $3 million per wildcat in an area like the Baltimore Canyon, it is an expensive gamble.

THRIBBLES. They are not the cute little creatures from Star Trek. When drill pipe and tubing are pulled from the well two joints at a time, they are called doubles. Oilfield logic then designates three joints as thribbles. Yes, four joints are called fourbles.

HIGH. Has nothing to do with joints. Has everything to do with the uppermost part of an inclined geological structure deep underground where the possibility of finding oil is considered to be the greatest.

Canines and cars don't mix on hot days

July and August's 90 degree weather bring the threat of heat prostration to dogs left in poorly ventilated areas such as cars. Since dogs don't sweat, a vicious cycle of heat production occurs due to the tremendous amount of heat generated by the dog's cooling system (panting).

Even when a small opening is left in a window, the hot air rises and effectively seals off fresh air exchange. When body temperature rises above 106 degrees brain damage can occur.

If an animal has collapsed from heat prostration hose him down with cold water and rush him to a veterinarian. This problem can be prevented by never leaving a dog in a car on hot days.

Commentary

The fading sun

It would seem that this planet has enough troubles.

The scramble to find gasoline at spiraling prices. The cost of housing has barred many Americans from adequate shelter. Supermarket prices increase day by day.

But now some physicists believe the sun is shrinking. They calculate that it loses about 8.3 miles of its 865,000-mile diameter every year.

Of course, the scientists concede, if the shrinkage rate of one-tenth of 1 percent a century had been constant throughout the sun's lifetime of some 4.6 billion years, the sun would long since have vanished.

Further research will be done on the apparent shrinkage. If it is confirmed, one scientist warned, "Astrophysicists will have a lot of explaining to do."

But without the sun who'd be around to listen?

Blue Shield good sense

Unnecessary hospitalization has long contributed to the alarming escalation of health care costs in the United States. And now that most American cities are experiencing a surplus of hospital beds, physicians find it easier than ever to admit patients who might just as well recuperate at home.

The fact that 90 percent of all hospital bills are paid by so-called third-parties — insurance companies or government agencies — leaves little direct incentive for physicians, hospitals or patients to economize.

The inevitable result is steeply rising health-care costs that in turn produce pressure for what we regard as ill-advised government controls.

A more constructive solution was suggested recently by Blue Shield of California. It recommended that physicians add 700 specified surgical and medical procedures to the list of those that should be performed without hospitalization. Most of these minor operations are routinely conducted under local anesthesia and, barring complications, patients need not run up their bill by spending any time in a hospital.

No doubt this will argue that these recommendations should be made binding and that Blue Shield of California should refuse to pay hospitalization for procedures on this list. But making the list advisory rather than mandatory leaves physicians free to determine the need for hospitalization on a case-by-case basis, which is the way such decisions should be made. The list does, however, put doctors on notice that their decisions will be audited and must be justified.

Blue Shield of California is the only Blue Cross-Blue Shield organization in the country pursuing such a program. Should it succeed in paring health-care costs, and we think it will, Blue Cross and Blue Shield insurers in other states will be hard pressed not to subject their own health-care costs to similar discipline.

Proxmire errs

Sen. William Proxmire has had a lot of fun with his "golden fleece" awards, ridiculing programs and projects that, in his opinion, were rip-offs of the American taxpayer.

The Supreme Court, however, has ruled that the senator erred in extending his criticisms in press releases, newsletters and interviews — that his activities outside the "legislative process" exceeded the scope of the immunity feature.

The senator's zeal in exposing government foolishness is commendable. The hole punched in the congressional immunity armor will assure that it is also responsible.

Air bag auto safety devices

Vaughn Pepper from the National Highway Transportation and Safety Administration in Baltimore, Maryland, recently conducted air bag safety demonstrations at Naval Air Station Oceana in Virginia Beach. Pictured here are two Navy officers from NAS who took part. Purpose of the demonstrations was to convince motorists and automobile passengers of the superior safety features of the air bags in reducing injuries and saving lives in the event of a highway accident.

Pepper's demonstrations were conducted with the cooperation and assistance of NAS Oceana's Safety Department. Booklets from the U.S. Department of Transportation, explaining the features and advantages of the air bags, were given to interested people watching or participating in the demonstrations.

Community education courses for fall quarter

The fall schedule of Spectrum non-credit community education courses begins at the Virginia Beach campus September 24. This fall the Spectrum program includes seventeen courses with a couple of new "twists."

A number of courses will be offered during more than one class period, and several are offered during the day as well as in the traditional Spectrum evening program.

Those courses offered during either daytime or evening hours include Beginning Contract Bridge; Body Conditioning: Holistic Exercise and Dance; Mom and Tot Exercise; and Beginning Tole Painting. There are three additional courses offered which feature two or more class options. Beginning Disco and Jazz Dance and Intermediate Disco and Jazz Dance are offered on Tuesday and Friday evenings.

Several new courses promise to be interesting additions to the Spectrum schedule. The Mom and Tot Exercise class offers a chance for mothers and children ages 3 to 7 to enjoy healthful and entertaining exercise in the company of other mothers and tots. The ten-week program features active exercise and dancing balanced with rest and relaxation using Yoga methods and soothing music.

The course in Body Conditioning: Holistic Exercise and Dance is devoted to developing the total physical and mental health of the individual, with emphasis on balance and posture, flexibility, the cardiovascular system and relaxation.

Tole Painting presents the fundamentals of an American folk craft which features painting on tin or wood using printed patterns.

A course on the U.S. Patent System is designed to provide students with the methods of obtaining information from patent literature, study of "official gazettes" and the developing of concept searches.

A new investments course, entitled Common "Cents" Investments for the Average Person, will help the student understand the nature and optimum use of mutual funds as investment vehicles and to determine whether such investments would be appropriate for the individual's portfolio.

Social Dance introduces the student to a variety of popular dances including the Swing, Cha Cha and Rhumba.

In addition to the new courses in the lineup, the fall Spectrum program includes a number of old favorites which continue in popularity. Adventures in Attitudes teaches personal awareness and growth through positive thought and action. Astrology I involves study of the Zodiac, signs, houses, planets, as well as setting up natal charts. Beginning Folk Guitar will enable students to make up their own accompaniments. Citizenship Education prepares those seeking citizenship for the naturalization examination, with emphasis on U.S. history and government, American culture and traditions, and the English language.

Disco and Jazz Dance courses, both Beginning and Intermediate help students stay up to date on the latest dance steps. Flower Arranging teaches the basic art of floral design in permanent and fresh flowers. Genealogy can help an individual with research methods involved in tracing family history. Interior Decorating features the proper use of color schemes, materials, and furniture arrangement.

Investments and Tax Shelters covers investment opportunities in a variety of areas. Parliamentary Law covers the procedures for conducting a meeting, taking minutes, giving a treasurer's report, and debate restrictions.

Registration for the fall Spectrum program begins August 6. Students may register either in person or by mail. Registration forms and additional information on courses, class schedules, and registration fees can be obtained by contacting the Office of Continuing Education at 427-3070.

These offerings are supported entirely by the fees paid by the participants. Twenty percent of the fee is reimbursed to the college to offset administrative overhead costs such as use of facilities and utilities.

SOCIAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATION

By Harvey J. Mulligan
Field Representative

Some people who are mentally retarded are forever children, trapped in the never-never land of Peter Pan and Winnie the Pooh. Others eventually progress to the point where they are able to work and achieve economic independence.

The key to full development of the retarded child's potential is love and understanding. Most authorities agree that family living arrangements for these children are generally preferable to prolonged institutional care.

Social security programs that provide cash benefits for the mentally retarded can play a critical role in their lives. The payments often mean the difference between living at home or in an institution. At the very least, the payments can ease the financial burden of lifetime care and dependency.

Severely retarded adults who meet the medical definition for disability may qualify for social security benefits as a dependent of a parent who gets retirement or disability benefits or who died after working long enough under social security. They are considered "adults disabled in childhood," and it must be shown that the condition existed before age 22.

The supplemental security income (SSI) program makes payments to people 65 or older, or blind, or disabled who have little income or resources. Severely retarded people of any age may qualify for payments if they meet the medical definition of disability and the income and resource limits.

In deciding if a child under 18 (or under 21 if in school) and living at home can get SSI payments, part of the parent's income and assets are considered to be the child's. After discounting allowances for work and living expenses and for other children living in the home, the remaining amount of a parent's income is used to decide if a child meets the income and assets limits.

People living in a public institution generally are not eligible for SSI payments. However, a retarded person living in a public institution may have progressed to the point that he or she could live outside the institution if a continuing source of income was available.

An application may be submitted for SSI payments when it appears that a person is ready to leave an institution soon.

People who live in publicly operated community residences serving no more than 16 people may be eligible. Also, if the state's Medicaid program pays more than half the cost of the person's care in a public or private institution, he or she may be eligible for a payment of up to $25 a month. This payment is for the person's personal use and cannot be used by the institution for the cost of the person's care.

A parent, guardian or other responsible person has the right to apply on behalf of the retarded person and can get a formal decision on eligibility. This is true even though it does not appear that the person meets all of the eligibility requirements.

A retarded child who is eligible for SSI may also qualify under the Aid to Families with Dependent Children program. However, the child can't get both AFDC and SSI. The parent or guardian can choose whichever one best suits the family needs.

If you know of a person who is mentally retarded and who may be eligible, you should suggest that the person responsible for the child get in touch with us. The phone number is 441-3401 for the Norfolk Social Security Office.

Use of solar energy to increase in future

By LIN J. COOPER

Director of Communications Tidewater Builders Association

When President Carter told us last week in his televised address to the nation that he will never again allow the nation to import more foreign oil than it did in 1977, he may well have initiated the beginning of a change in how we heat and cool the homes in our future. And certainly what looks extremely bright, no pun intended, in our future horizon is solar energy.

Prospective homeowners must think so too, because the builders' association has noticed a substantial increase during the last year in the number of people calling us who are interested in acquiring more information about solar energy. The oil shortages, as well as mounting electrical costs, have made solar heating and cooling an ever-increasingly attractive alternative.

I thought some of you would be interested in some questions and answers about solar energy courtesy of the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development in cooperation with the U.S. Department of Energy.

Q. How do solar energy systems work?

A. Radiation is absorbed by a collector, placed in storage, with or without the assistance of a transfer medium and distributed to the point of use—your living space. The performance of each operation is maintained and monitored by either automatic or manual controls. An auxiliary heater provides backup for times when the solar system is not working.

Q. What kinds of solar heating systems are there?

A. There are two basic types: active and passive. Active systems are divided into liquid and air systems. They use pumps and pipes (or fans and ducts) to carry heat from the collectors to storage and from storage to the living space of the house. Some passive systems use the wall of the house or a separate stationary wall as both the collector and storage medium. In the passive house, movable wall panels, or flaps, are often used to direct the heat throughout the living space. Another approach is to collect and store heat in water basins on the roof; this system can also provide cooling in the summer.

Q. When should I consider an active as opposed to a passive system?

A. An active system can be used in either new or existing construction and may be useful for an older home if you plan on remodeling or upgrading your present heating systems and area adding insulation, weatherstripping and other energy conserving features. Your property must have good southern exposure to take full advantage of the sun's light.

A passive system should be considered when you are designing a new home and your main use is space heating. The design of a passive solar home usually requires careful consideration of siting, north-south orientation protective landscaping and high quality construction.

Q. How is heat stored in a solar energy system?

A. In space heating systems that use a liquid heat transfer medium, the storage system is usually a large tank of water (about 600 to 1000 gallons or even more). In systems that use air as a heat transfer medium, the storage system is usually a bin of large gravel. Hot air flows through the space between the one to two-inch gravel and heats it. In this case, the bin must be about two and a half times as large as the tank used in a water storage system. Another way of putting this is that there should be a half cubic foot of rock for every square foot of collector.

Q. How is hot water produced for domestic uses with a solar energy system?

A. The fluid drawn from the solar collectors is run through a coil in a tank of water and heats it. Water is circulated through a second coil in the tank, heated, and drawn off for domestic uses. If you have a solar domestic hot water system, your system must be so constructed that any anti-freeze solution used cannot leak into your hot water supply.

Q. Can I put in a domestic hot water system and add space heating later?

A. Sometimes, particularly in new construction where the basic house can be so designed. Be sure to plan ahead, analyzing such factors as where you would put the storage container.

Q. What should I consider before deciding to invest in solar?

A. In assessing the economics of any solar energy system for your home, you should look carefully at the trade-offs between the higher installation and equipment costs you will be paying compared to the potential savings you will be realizing due to decreased use of conventional fuel sources. As we can all surmise, the more that conventional fuel prices rise, the better your solar alternative will look.

Q. How can I obtain more information about building a home using solar energy or installing a solar energy system in my present home?

A. The National Solar Heating and Cooling Information Center, P.O. Box 1607, Rockville, Md. 20850 will be happy to answer your questions about applications in solar energy homebuilding. Also, I have a limited number of brochures on solar energy, and a bibliography for those who'd like to do extensive reading, at the TBA office. If you'll call me at 461-9140, I'll be happy to drop in the mail some information that should prove useful to you.

Area professionals named to board

John H. Fain, former Independent Data Processing Contractor, and Chris A. Crumley, formerly group manager for a regional medical data processing and service facility, have been named president and vice-president, respectively, of the Board of Directors of Metro Information Services, Inc. Both are residents of Virginia Beach.

Metro Information Services is a Virginia corporation providing educational, technical and management support services to a number of area data processing installations.

Fain and Crumley are also members of the Board of Directors of the Tidewater Chapter of the Data Processing Management Association and have been active in numerous local information processing activities.

John H. Fain

Appointed

The Virginia Beach City Council has appointed Lawrence L. Joyner Jr. to serve on the Virginia Beach Development Authority.

Joyner manages the J.C. Penney Regional Distribution Center in Airport Industrial Park. He has been responsible for many of the innovative distribution procedures pioneered by J.C. Penney in recent years.

Joyner will complete the term of Willard Whitehurst which expires October 2, 1981.

Virginia Beach resident is among carpentry apprentices graduated

In a wooded setting in the Peppertree subdivision in Chesapeake and adjacent to the triplex housing unit they framed, a Virginia Beach man is among 13 young men and women who graduated July 20 from a six-week pre-apprenticeship training course in carpentry.

The Beach resident who completed the course is a former shipyard worker, Wayne A. Patterson of 3728 Mantle Lane. Students in the program were formerly employed as laborers, clerks, fast food handlers, and construction helpers.

The trainees are enrolled in the Manpower Training Program of Tidewater Builders Association. They have completed the first step in a four-year journeyman's carpentry program, and following graduation, all the students reported to full-time with TBA members.

As their special pre-apprentice training project, the students completed the framing for a triplex in the subdivision being built by Sunrise Construction Corporation. It was the most sophisticated project yet undertaken by an apprenticeship class. Peppertree is noted for its man-made lakes and save-the-trees policy.

Graduation certificates were presented by TBA President C. Gerald Harris. Present at the ceremony were representatives of the Virginia Employment Commission, who helped recruit trainees into the program, and the U.S. Department of Labor who fund the program. Also present were Chesapeake city inspectors, representatives of the Veterans Administration, and Sunrise Construction principals Joseph Fenton, Calvin Davis and Sunrise's general manager Mark Urban, a 1978 graduate of TBA's Manpower Training Program.

The Manpower Training Program is designed to take young area residents out of unskilled jobs and off unemployment rolls and teach them skilled trades in the construction industry. The carpentry class is the fifth TBA has sponsored since the program's inception in January 1978.

Farming: Virginia's third most hazardous job

He's up with the sun, working all day in fields with wide horizons. At day's end, he puts away his machines, feeds his animals and goes home with the sunset. A farmer's life is physically taxing, but runs in harmony with nature's usually gentle cycles, many of us believe.

But the farmer also breathes in dust; is often alone in his fields working with heavy, sophisticated equipment; and many times must alter his planting schedules to match the whims of weather and federal controls.

Farming is one of Virginia's most dangerous occupations.

"Farmers must deal with a variety of potential hazards in carrying out their essential role as producers of food and fiber, Commissioner S. Mason, Carbaugh, Virginia Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services, said.

"Farm Safety Week, which begins July 25, offers an important opportunity to annually reevaluate personal safeguards against possible injury."

"This year's Farm Safety Week theme - 'Personal Protection - A Defense Against Injury,' emphasizes the farmer's task of protecting himself from the many hazards he encounters every day," Carbaugh said.

In Virginia, farming ranks behind only construction and mining in work-related injuries and fatalities. The whole area of agriculture, from cultivating and planting fields, transporting supplies to the farm, and goods from the farm to the processing plant or market place has been pinpointed by the National Farm Safety Institute as the country's third most hazardous occupation.

On-farm safety concerns begin far from the farm itself. Equipment engineers and producers design equipment to minimize risk and provide instructions for safe operation. Farm safety is the country's third most hazardous occupation.

On-farm safety concerns begin far from the farm itself. Equipment engineers and producers design equipment to minimize risk and provide instructions for safe operation. Farm safety is considered in the labeling of many products such as pesticides and medicated feeds used by farmers.

All manufacturers who sell pesticides or medicated feeds in Virginia must register with VDACS before offering their products for sale, Carbaugh said. Pesticide labels provide directions for effective and safe use, not only to the applicators but to the environment.

Medicated feed labels include information about the effectiveness and safety to animals being treated, with directions for appropriate dosages, and length of time before slaughtering and marketing the medicine should be discontinued, in order to protect the consumer of animal products. Also included are precautions necessary for the safety of the farmer in handling such products.

"After registration, our inspectors check products in trade channels for proper directions and safety warnings, thus insuring the farmer clear, easily understandable guidelines for on-farm use," Carbaugh said. Department inspectors also do so on-farm inspections to make sure that directions are followed.

program is the Certified

Pesticide Applicators' Program. After passing a competency test, applicators are certified and licensed by VDACS. Since the program was mandated by the Environmental Protection Agency in 1977, more than 25,000 persons have been tested and licensed to use restricted use pesticides. Of these, more than 20,000 are farmers (private applicators) and 3,000 or so are commercial (those who spray for pay), Carbaugh said. Scattered records make difficult the compilation of statistics about farm accidents, injuries and deaths, Dr. G.H. Hetzel, Cooperative Extension farm safety specialist has said.

As Virginia's only 'official' farm safety specialist, Hetzel maintains a statistics clearinghouse in his office. He conducts safety training sessions with interested groups. But there are difficulties in tracking down 'hard' statistics.

For example, the U.S. Occupational Health and Safety Administration (OSHA) keeps tabs on only 46,000 or so of the nearly quarter million Virginians who earn their living farming. Because OSHA guidelines apply only to workplaces with one or more fulltime, non-family workers, hundreds of small farms are automatically exempt from routine safety inspections.

With the July 31 end of Farm Safety Week, Hetzel will conclude Virginia's first farm safety survey. Since last July, about 1,500 farmers have responded quarterly to a survey Hetzel designed. The survey asks simply if any farm accidents have occurred during the past three months.

If the reply is 'yes,' respondents are asked to detail circumstances. The survey is funded by the Virginia Agricultural Foundation, and staffed by volunteers from local Farm Bureaus.

"Farm safety is essential, not only for the farmer, but for the consumer who benefits from the farmer's work. Farm Safety Week is just one week of special emphasis.

Summer safety

Summer sandals should be abandoned for sturdier shoes when it's time to mow the lawn. Homeowners can avoid finding themselves among the millions of summer accident victims by using caution and common sense around the house and yard.

Retain quality in canned vegetables

Freezing or canning vegetables at home can help get the most from the garden bounty that often overflows in the summer, but you need to watch several critical points to assure quality.

Getting vegetables from the garden to the freezer or can quickly is one of them. Quality erodes in a hurry in many vegetables if they are harvested too long before processing. If you must hold vegetables before processing spread them loosely in a cool, well-ventilated place or pack loosely in the refrigerator.

It is also advisable in hot weather to harvest vegetables in the early morning before they absorb much heat.

If you want to know more; come join the classes being offered by the Virginia Beach Department of Agriculture / Cooperative Extension Service. "Tomatoes From Vine to Kitchen" is being offered July 25 from 1 to 3 p.m. at the Virginia Beach Recreation Center. Call 427-4511 to register.

Beach, blind & boat: Plenty of croaker, trout on Eastern Shore

Virginia Beach Sun Outdoor Writer

Each week I have had good reports on the crabbing at the area piers, but I didn't realize how good it really was until Thursday. That evening I decided I wanted to go fishing, yet it was a little late to take the boat out. I called a few friends of mine that I was sure would get me at the drop of a hat and made arrangements to meet them at the Lynnhaven fishing pier. By 8:30 p.m. Dick Reinhart, Moose Bailey, Don Hartley and I were on the pier ready for action, and action was what we got.

After an hour I had begun to wish I had come prepared to crab instead of fish. We were catching five crabs to every fish. I have never seen crabs hang on to bait as long as these did. At first I was trying to shake them off, but after a while I began to save them for a guy who was crabbing just down the pier from me. While we were there the tide was going out and you could see hundreds of crabs swimming on the surface as they passed under the pier with the tide. I saw several people who had caught as many as three bushel baskets full and were still catching them when we left. Although crabs seemed to be the center of the action, there was plenty of spot and trout and we managed to catch a nice mess before we left.

On the Eastern Shore things are looking good, all the seaside channels are yielding plenty of flounder, trout and croaker. At Cobbs Inlet (Sand Shoal Inlet) private and charter boats were catching all the trout they wanted. Capt. Ray Taylor of Oyster put his party on them and came back with over two hundred pounds. I had reports of others doing equally as well.

On Thursday Capt. Walter Lewis on the "Nancy May" put his party on a large school of croaker. Capt. Lewis was fishing at the C-12 buoy and his party caught approximately two hundred pounds before calling it a day. I also had reports of net fishermen catching as much as 2000 lbs. per night in the same area, so the croakers are definitely there. On Monday I did receive information that the school had moved farther down the bay and the larger catches were being made in the vicinity of the Plantation Light. So if you are planning to give them a try, you might want to head in that direction.

Emmet Bailey of Bailey's Bait and Tackle Shop at Cape Charles told me that in addition to the large croaker catches, cobia fishermen are having a little better luck. Large flounder are being caught just outside of Cape Charles harbor.

Along the Chesapeake Bay Bridge-Tunnel a variety of fish are being taken. Around the third and fourth islands tautog fishermen are doing pretty well. Carry Barkow of Virginia Beach caught a 14 lb. citation grey trout. In the Baltimore Channel, Henry Gull caught himself a 10 lb. 14 oz. citation flounder and Thomas C. Wilson caught a nine pounder.

Off-shore boats are beginning to notice the midsummer transition from tuna to billfish. Most of the boats are catching more marlin than tuna and also dolphin are starting to appear in the boats' daily catches. On Sunday most of the boats out of the Virginia Beach Sports Fishing Center at Rudee had a fair day. The charter boat "Hustler" had one blue marlin, the "Gannett" had two white marlin as did the "High Hopes." On the "Rhonda" ten year old Dusty Fowler of Chesapeake caught a 31 lb. citation mahi mahi which is quite a feat for such a little fellow. The "Rhonda" also brought back a 76 lb. mako shark. Capt. Jeff Burger on the "Green Eyes" put his party on 4 tuna, several dolphin and a mess of blues all in the same day.

Along the coast from Nags Head to Cape Henry the King Mackerel are starting to appear. Robert McLester of Virginia Beach caught a 23 lb. 4 oz. citation about 1/4 mile out of Rudee Inlet. I also have had reports of five being taken at the extreme end of Virginia Beach ocean Pier. These mackerel were caught on float rigs.

Dwell at Nags Head things are still a little slow. Milton at Tatums Bait and Tackle shop told me that the only steady action had been the trout and flounder being taken at Oregon Inlet. Milton did say that on Thursday, Friday and Saturday surf fishermen using blood worm and squid did have fairly good luck on small grey trout and spot at ramp 12 and 14. Also a few king mackerel have been taken on the very ends of the piers but not on a regular basis.

On the freshwater scene, the action is not as good as it was two weeks ago but fishermen are still putting a fair share of fish in their creels. At Back Bay the bass seem to be plentiful as well as the crappie bream, yellow perch and catfish.

At the Northwest River Camp Grounds, Otis told me that his regulars are still catching fish. On Monday Rev. Ivy Carter caught 10 bass and released all but four. Rowland Marshall "the River Rat" caught 20 crappie and Cecil Culpepper caught 15 bream.

This week eleven new game wardens will be on the job in Virginia. Colonel John McLaughlin, Chief of the Virginia Game Commission's Law Enforcement Division said that the wardens are recent graduates of the Central Virginia Criminal Justice Training Center and they will be taking assignments throughout the state this week. Two of the wardens will be assigned to our general area. Warden Woodrow B. Chandler will be assigned to the Virginia Beach area and Warden Mickey Esham will be assigned to Accomac County on the Eastern Shore.

When docking a boat remember that your reverse is the only brake you have. Should your engine stall during docking you could do a great deal of damage to the dock, not to mention your boat and pride. Keep your speed at a minimum when docking, and pay attention to wind direction. The wind can be a useful tool in controlling your boat at the dock. A wind blowing onto the dock will put you at dock side if you will use it. When leaving dock let the wind also assist you. If the wind is blowing off the dock you can let it blow your bow off by holding in on your stern line, then you will be headed into the channel without doing a lot of backing and kicking ahead. Remember safe boating is common sense, courtesy and close adherence to rules of the road.

If you're planning to do some fishing this week here is a tide table for July 27 through August 2, 1979. The table is computed for high tide at Sewells Point. To obtain Oregon Inlet subtract 1 hour 59 minutes; Virginia Beach subtract 1 hour 30 minutes; Lynnhaven subtract 13 minutes; and Kiptopeake subtract 40 minutes. To obtain approximate low tides add six hours to the high tide times.

'Flapping' harmful to boats

While sailboaters grow used to the sound of lines and sails flapping in the wind, powerboaters are cautioned to beware of potential harm if they allow too much flapping to take place.

For example, if trailer tie-down straps are not tight enough, they can flap against the sides of the boat and make chafe marks on it.

Either keep the strap tight when on the road, or tape pieces of soft cloth to it that will spare the sides of the boat from the rather dense, hard webbing in the strap.

Also, if you leave the end of the strap hanging loose after snugging up the buckle, wind can flap the strap end around and the metal tip on it can make a mess of any boat surfaces it may contact.

Boating experts suggest that you either tuck the end of the strap very securely into the buckle, or else secure the end with a shoelace, length of friction tape or some kind of spring clamp.

It's a temptation to save time by leaving a boat's folding top up while trailering.

But the flapping it gets at highway speeds soon takes the life out of the fabric and weakens the stitching.

It's better to take a few minutes to lower the top before trailering.

If you want to leave it up for a short trip home, at least make sure its tension straps are snug to minimize the flapping.

In a recent survey of fisheries department managers, 44 of them listed bluegill as holding either first or second place on the sportfishing popularity charts in their states.

Why does this small fish species rate so high? Probably because bluegill are a lot of fun and easy to catch, say the fishing experts.

But, they point out, there's a major difference between spring and summer fishing for bluegill.

In spring, bluegill are spawning, in shallow water and will strike at just about any line or bait offered. But in summer, they become finicky eaters, stay in deep water most of the day, and usually pick up a bait so lightly it's difficult to know when they're striking.

The key to summer bluegill fishing is to get your lure deep and work it slowly.

Use light line and be alert for the slightest tap on the hook.

Insects, real or imitations, are excellent baits. Catalpa worms are deadly. Use just enough weight to put the lure down in eight or 10 feet of water.

It doesn't have to touch bottom, but should be retrieved slowly to the boat.

Early morning and late evening offer a different situation. Big bluegill often come to the top at these hours and are fun to catch on light tackle.

Work the edges of shore and any brush in the water with a fly rod and small corkbodied popping bug.

Three ways you can slow it down this summer

at a 78° setting. By watching your thermostat, you'll save energy at a time when it's most important.

And you'll save money, too. Do the big jobs early. Or late. We call it Hot Watch. The hours between 10 A.M. and 10 P.M. are the "peak load" hours, when the most electricity is being used and the chance of shortages is greatest.

So try to restrict your use of major appliances and hot water during these hours.

Do your baking and laundry before 10 A.M. Turn on the dishwasher just before you go to bed. Shower before 10 A.M. or after 10 P.M.

You won't be using less energy, but you'll be using it when we have power to spare. And that will reduce our need to build costly power plants.

Give your water heater a rest. It will save money and energy. With the exception of heating and cooling systems, the water heater is the biggest energy user in your home. So try your best to work it less.

Use your dishwasher and washing machine only for full loads. Wash clothes in cool or warm water instead of hot. Take showers instead of baths, and keep them short.

With your help we can save energy and make it through the summer. And that's important to all of us.
